OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The Attitude of the Government on the Alabama Question.

Action of President Grant and His Cabinet.

Details of the Instructions to Mr. Motley.

Mr. Sumner's Speech Not Adopted as the Basis.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 13.

Since the discussion of the Alabama question, both at home and abroad, has taken such a wide scope, and since there has been such a decided reaction from the positions of Mr. SUMNER's speech, and since the proposition to make the question a party issue meets with little serious countenance, it becomes more than usually interesting to know precisely where the Administration stands at present. The Gladstone Ministry will, in a few days officially understand our position, and there can, therefore, be no impropriety in stating the facts as they exist.

So much has been said from this point on this subject, and such vague and contradictory accounts have been given of Mr. MOTLEY's instructions, that the public mind must be much confused respecting the precise attitude of our Government. Mr. SUMNER, while never asserting in positive terms that these instructions were based on his speech, has, nevertheless, sought to convey in his conversations the impression that he had been substantially indorsed, and he has repeatedly stated that Mr. MOTLEY and himself were in perfect accord upon the subject. This latter assertion is very possibly true. But Mr. SUMNER knows what Mr. MOTLEY's instructions are as thoroughly as does the man who wrote them, and his pride probably prevents him from making a frank admission of the completeness of his defeat. No matter what impressions he may convey in discussing the subject, it is nevertheless known here that he is much displeased with the instructions, and that they are almost entirely at variance with his views, for the following reasons:

First—Mr. SUMNER wanted Mr. MOTLEY instructed to propose a reopening of the negotiations at once on the basis of his speech. Mr. MOTLEY's instructions were precisely the reverse of this, to wit—to make no overtures for the reopening of negotiations at present, but await the action of the English Government and the development of events.

Second—Mr. SUMNER wanted the instructions to cover the question of belligerency, which, he insists in his speech, gives this Government a claim against the British Government for damages or reparation. On the contrary, Mr. Motley was instructed to inform the British Government at the proper time that the United States, or a Government, has no claim against Great Britain for damages because of her recognition of the belligerency of the rebels.

This whole matter was maturely considered by the President, both in Cabinet and out of Cabinet, and in the light not only of our relations to Great Britain, but our relations to France, Spain and other nations which recognized the South. In these discussions, the only man who stood by Mr. SUMNER's position was Secretary BOUTWELL. Every other member of the Cabinet, as well as the President, disapproved very decidedly of the policy enunciated in Mr. SUMNER's speech, and the result of their deliberations was, as has been repeatedly stated in your telegraphic dispatches, that the Administration on this question resolved upon the policy of non-action.

These I know to be the facts in the case, and they define substantially the present attitude of the Administration.

I may add one word respecting the Cuban question. The President, the Secretary of War, and possibly one or two other members of the Cabinet, were strongly desirous of taking early steps toward the recognition of the insurgents. But after a careful review of the whole situation, it was formally decided that the aspect of affairs did not warrant action by the Government. This was prior to the recent revolutionary events on the Island, since which there has been no reconsideration of the subject.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

Sentiment in Regard to the French Elections—Napoleon's Policy—Domestic Matters—Approaching Decline of the Ministry—The Races—Hon. Reverdy Johnson—Decease of a Millionaire.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, May 29, 1869.

The opinion is fast gaining strength here that the French elections are not unlikely to result in war. The Empire is losing ground, and that to a dangerous extent; not even its most sanguine friends can deny this. "France," as one writer truly describes the situation, "has begun to weary of the Government of NAPOLEON." But NAPOLEON is not the man to allow the prize for which he has struggled against a host of enemies to slip quietly from a nerveless hand. He will endeavor to restore the strength and popularity of his name. But how? By throwing himself boldly into the current of popular feeling, and conceding those rights and privileges which the people think they could secure—but which they have never yet secured—under a republic? Or by a great war to wipe out the memory of Mexico and Sadowa? Either course is attended with risk. To release liberty from the chains he has placed upon it might be to set the part of the man who set the genii free, and was instantly destroyed for his pains. Then for the other alternative—a war, might be unsuccessful. It would not, at first, be unpopular. But it is an experiment to be thought carefully about before it is attempted.

A Frenchman, who is as well entitled to be heard on any subject which concerns the drift of the Emperor's opinions as any man in his country, remarked the other day, "If we are to go to war, the Emperor would by preference choose the United States, for we have never been able to forget the ignominious manner in which we were obliged to withdraw our troops from Mexico. But there is no excuse for quarreling with the Americans—see how polite WASHBURNE was the other day! The next most unpopular Power in France is Prussia. We hate, too, to cry to slip her wings since the American eagle is beyond our reach." This observation set me wondering on a point which has always been a standing puzzle to me—namely, why America showers all her civilities on France which hates her, which tried to induce England to recognize the South, and which is ripe for a quarrel with her at any moment? It is not enough, surely, to say that France—wishing to weaken and injure England—assisted America in her war of Independence. "Whenever you go to war with the United States," said the same gentleman above quoted, "France will ask to be allowed to range herself on your side." Why should America press her friendship upon a Power which receives it so ungraciously?

NAPOLEON, however, is now bending his eyes upon Belgium. Does he mean invasion? The Independance Belge says yes. A few days ago the semi-official papers in Paris announced that armed bands were recruiting in Belgium for the invasion of France. The story seems absurd, but there can be no doubt that it was not not affect without a motive. It was to prejudice the minds of the French people still further against Belgium. The Independance Belge contradicted the assertion, and followed up its denials for several days. On each of these days it was seized, and its circulation totally prohibited in France. Why? If there is no ulterior movement behind this policy of calumniating Belgium, and refusing to allow the truth to appear, why does the Government sanction it?

All these inferences prove nothing, but they unsettle public feeling. The elections must be neutralized in some way. One thing, at least, consoles the Emperor. If France is not friendly to his dynasty, it certainly does not give the preference to any of his rivals. Everywhere the Orleanists have been defeated. The English journals which represent the interests of the ORLEANS family admit that their party is extinct. There has never been a period when the fortunes of that house looked more gloomy than they do at present. It is against the idea of a republic that the Emperor has to fight. Those who are hostile to the Emperor will not fail to recognize a stroke of retributive justice in this. Twenty years ago LOUIS NAPOLEON took the following oath: "In presence of God, and before the French people, represented by the National Assembly, I swear to remain faithful to the Democratic Republic, one and indivisible, and to fulfill all the duties which the Constitution imposes upon me." How he kept that oath is known to history. But history will also ask in what spirit he discharged the trust which he wrongfully seized, and it may happen that the verdict will not be so utterly against him as his enemies believe.

BRITISH POLICY.

In our own domestic affairs the only event to record is that it has been settled we shall all pay five quarters' taxes within one year—when four only are due. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. LOWE, has tried to hoodwink the public to this fact, but it is quite clear to everyone but himself. There was no opposition to the Budget. There is no opposition to anything now. The position of the Conservative Party in the House of Commons is an exact parallel to the position occupied by the Democrats in the Thirty-ninth Congress. They cannot even make a strong protest. The leaders appear to have thrown down the cards in despair. It would have been very easy to have made a successful stand against Mr. LOWE's scheme if the Conservatives possessed any power or influence at all; but they are for the moment thoroughly demoralized. Mr. GLADSTONE has the destinies of the country entirely in his own hands. And yet we are now at the end of May, and not one measure which will in any way benefit the mass of the people has been carried.

This fact, together with some minor but not unimportant circumstances, are unquestionably weakening the Ministry out of doors. The conduct of the Government in discharging large numbers of trained artisans from the dock-yards, and inducing them to quit the country altogether, has made a great impression—although not sufficiently great to counteract Mr. GLADSTONE's popularity. Then, of all the promises for the "social amelioration" of the people which were put forward, not one has been fulfilled. Mr. POWERS has introduced an Education bill, but it simply plays with the subject, even with that branch of it which it proposes to deal with. Taxation is upon the whole, increased. There are also some personal causes which point to the decline of the Ministry at no distant date. First it is Mr. BRIGHT, who nearly upsets the coach; soon afterward it is Mr. LOWE. No one ever did get on well with Mr. LOWE, and no one ever will. It is said that when he took his passage for England from Australia, half the people whose names were also upon the books, withdrew them and decided to go by another vessel. Mr. LOWE is one of the most disagreeable men alive. He contrives to leave hatreds behind him wherever he goes. The secret of it is very well pointed out by the Spectator to-day, in an article which it would do Mr. LOWE much good to read, if he were not far too confident of his own supreme wisdom ever to take advice. He despises everybody. He thinks that God has denied brains to everybody but himself. The Spectator does not say this, but it admits that Mr. LOWE has "no sympathy with commonplace people, of whom the world is, after all, chiefly composed. "Mr. LOWE," says your contemporary, "makes merry with a difficulty because it is one patent to commonplace minds, whereas, that is just the reason why it is a grave difficulty, and not a trivial one. The politician has to deal exclusively with commonplace men. If he takes to despising their difficulties, he takes to despising the only things with which politics, on the whole, profess to deal. No politician, however brilliant, is worth much without the largest amount of commonplace at the bottom of his genius." This is all very sensible, but of course Mr. LOWE thinks he knows better.

THE RACES.

I have said that the only event of the week is the reception by the House of Mr. LOWE's Budget. Any reader who happens to take an interest in sporting will wonder where I have been to have heard nothing of the race of the year, or of the "Oaks." There is time enough, however, to show that I am aware these two events have occurred. Luckily, this year they are not mixed up with any great scandal, such as that which was associated with the Marquis of HASTINGS and his mare Lady Elizabeth. I hear of one man, a "bookmaker," who won £50,000 on the Derby, but the losses are pretty widely distributed, and consequently do not fall with crushing severity upon any one. The reason of this is that the public took a great fancy for a horse called Belladrum, and believed, all warnings to the contrary, that he would certainly win the race. He never even went near it. Consequently the generous public are called upon to pay up their money, and the North country people have walked off with the greater part of it. It is perhaps a noteworthy fact that the winner of the Derby, and the second, were almost the ugliest horses in the race. Beauty did not carry the day. Belladrum is admitted to be the handsomest horse of the year, but he cut a sorry figure in the race. It is wonderful to think how much depends on the quickness of sight of one man in a race like this. The two horses, Pretender and Pero Gomez, were so close together at the winning post that the very jockeys on their backs could not tell which was first. The spectators were fully convinced that Pero Gomez had won, and so did the owner. But the judge decided that Pretender was a trifle ahead—"the breadth of a man's head," he said. It is admitted that the moment after passing the critical post, Pero Gomez was first. One stride made all the difference in the disposal of £200,000 or so. The backers of Pretender insist that they have had a very narrow escape.

The Prince of WALES went to see the race, where, doubtless, he was much more at home than at a gathering of savans a few days previously, at the Royal Geographical Society. Our intelligent Prince is almost obliged to show his face at such gatherings once now and then, but the horrible way in which he is bored by the infliction reveals itself in his wonderful speeches. He had to make a speech the other night, and what he said was this: "You cannot form so full or favorable an idea of the countries described by reading of them in books as you can by visiting them yourselves." After all the education this young man has received, and all the opportunities of travel he has enjoyed, he could think of nothing better to say than this. The truth is that he seems to be utterly without capacity of any kind—I mean intellectual capacity. In other respects he is fully competent to keep up the reputation of certain members of his family now happily deceased. We shall all be very proud by and by of a King who can never open his mouth except to be laughed at.

HON. REVERDY JOHNSON.

One of the papers has made merry over what it calls the "sanguine temper" of Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON. The cause is this: When Mr. JOHNSON came to this country he took a house in Upper Portland Place. It seems that the agent inserted a clause in the agreement providing that if Mr. JOHNSON did not keep the house for the full term decided on he should pay a forfeit. It is said that he was called upon for his forfeit, and that it amounted to £2,000. The rent of the house (furnished) was, I know, £1,600 a year. If Mr. JOHNSON had kept it for a time he might easily have found another tenant, at say £600 a year, so that his loss would not have been very large. The story seems to me to tell rather against our house Agents and their way of doing business than against the late Envoy. I am not acquainted with the system of carrying on transactions of this kind in the United States, but I am convinced that it would be hard to find a more rapacious and unscrupulous set of men anywhere than English house agents. They get a man into their clutches and never let him go again, if they can help it, until they have plundered him in every conceivable way. I advise all strangers to avoid them. If they want a house, let them advertise and deal with principals only. Had Mr. JOHNSON known as much of agents here as he does now, I doubt very much whether he would have employed one. As for his being "chaffed" for a "sanguine Envoy" because he did not anticipate being recalled, only ignorance can have suggested this line toward him. Is it usual for an American Minister, who strictly follows his instructions, to be dismissed after six months' service?

TRAVELING BY COACH.

The pleasures of traveling by coach may once more be enjoyed by visitors to this country. Three times a week a coach leaves London for Brighton, its route lying through a beautiful and varied country, and the "turn-out" being of the most unexceptionable description. The horses are worth £200 each, and the coach is like that which Mr. LEONARD JEROME used to "tool" so skillfully through the streets of New-York and down to the race-course and club. Now another coach is put on—this time to Windsor. It leaves every day, and is driven by a nobleman well-known for his love of horses, and by another amateur. Neither of these coaches is started as commercial speculations. The owners are private gentlemen, and they find the horses and stage. They are, however, always at the service of the public at very moderate rates, and a more lovely drive cannot be imagined than that to be had from the top of them. I hope to give you a fuller account of it some day.

DECEASE OF A MILLIONAIRE.

Here is a nice father-in-law—a man to love and be proud of—Mr. WILLIAM COOK, a warehouseman, as we say, or a dry goods merchant, as you put it, died the other day, and left to each of his some-in-law £30,000 in money, and a fine estate. How they must revere his memory! This most excellent man—I declare I have the greatest respect for him, not having the honor of being his son-in-law—left this world worth £600,000, besides landed property. The greater part goes to his eldest son, the daughters only coming in for little clippings. But £30,000 is £2,500 a year. One can exist on that. Mr. COOK was a most exemplary man. May he sleep in peace, and may fathers-in-law like unto him be multiplied exceedingly!

L.

HAYTI.

Attack on Aux Cayes—No Results Reported—Affairs at St. Marc and at Portau-Prince—General Tranquillity—English Insolence Rebuked.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Saturday, May 29, 1869.

The expected attack upon Aux Cayes by the land forces of SALNAVE has been made, but up to the latest advices received here from that place, with indecisive results. At first the Government troops penetrated the town, and got even into the two forts, but the rebels subsequently rallied and drove them out, the fighting being very severe, and the losses heavy on both sides. In the struggle at the forts many of SALNAVE's troops jumped into the sea and were drowned. The attack was to be renewed; but the repulse sustained by them had had a disspiriting effect upon the assailants, and it was thought that SALNAVE might not succeed in taking the city after all. The port of Aux Cayes continued to be strictly blockaded.

At St. Marc all was quiet. Twenty-three square-rigged vessels were in port, some loading with cotton, coffee, &c., for the United States and Europe. The steamer Clara Helena was among them. Provisions were plentiful. The troops were in good spirits and were inspected every Sunday by President NISAGE SAGET. Several fortifications had recently been built at St. Marc. News had been received there of the bombardment of Aux Cayes by SALNAVE, the only effect being to make the insurgents of the former place redouble their exertions in improving the defences of the place.

Affairs are quiet here. The monopoly decree lately issued by the Government could not be executed in its integrity. The Government, however, continue to monopolize all the coffee that was brought to market, giving it to the American merchants in exchange for gunpowder. The President is expected here overland from Aux Cayes.

At Gonaives the rebels were shelling the town night and day, and numbers of the towns-people were leaving this place for Port-au-Prince. In Jacmel, on the south of the Island, all was quiet. Several vessels were loading logwood for Europe.

The steamer Alexander Pelion is here undergoing repairs, rendered necessary by the accident she met with in running aground near Aux Cayes. As soon as they are completed she is to be dispatched to Aux Cayes with ammunition and shell.

A decree of considerable importance to traders with Hayti had been issued. The Government having withdrawn the permission it had given to the proprietors of the English line of steamers from Liverpool to the West Indies to construct a landing in the roadstead of the harbor to the city, for loading and discharging cargo from those vessels, and the landing having been constructed contrary to the will of the Government, a decree had been issued by President SALNAVE absolutely forbidding all shipments of native produce, or loading of foreign merchandise at the said English landing. All persons disregarding the decree will be considered as dealing in contraband, and be punished and be subjected to all the rigors of the customs laws, all the goods seized and sold at public auction for the benefit of the State, as well as the vessels landing or receiving such goods, and all boats, &c., employed by them in such work; and if the guilty parties should be foreigners they will be summarily deprived of their Haiti licenses.

Exchange here is rising; bills, 20; Gold, 2000 20; at Jacmel, exchange, 25.

BEECHER'S SERMON.

The Last Sabbath of the Graduating Class at West Point.

Characteristic Discourse on the "Perfect Gentleman."

Conflict with the World More Efficacious Means of Grace than Churches or Sunday Schools.

The Soldier Ought to be the Highest Type of the Gentleman.

From Our Special Correspondent.

WEST POINT, Sunday, June 13, 1869.

The only event of interest that occurred after I had closed my letter of yesterday was a ball in the evening at Cozzens' Hotel. It was tendered by the proprietor of the hotel to the Graduating Class of cadets, and was a very decided success.

To-morrow morning General SHERMAN is expected here, and he will very probably make an address to the cadets before he leaves the Point.

General GRANT is still here, and attracts the usual observation when out of doors.

This morning Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER BEECHER preached the "graduating sermon" of the present year at West Point. Previous to the sermon the annual inspection of the whole body of cadets was made on the parade ground by Brevet Major-General SCHRIEVER, the Inspector of the Academy. The students then proceeded to the chapel where they were joined by as many civilians as could find convenient sitting or standing room. Among the persons present were President and Mrs. GRANT, Major-General IRWIN MCDOWELL, Major-General PITCHER, Superintendent of the Academy, Colonel BLACK, Commandant of the Cadets, Major-General SCHRIEVER and General CROSSMAN. Mr. BEECHER, after the usual preliminary services, delivered the following discourse:

THE SERMON.

The fourth chapter of Ephesians, the thirteenth verse:

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

The apostle in the preceding verses has been speaking of the variety of the instruments employed by the promulgation of the Gospel—to some he gives apostles, to some prophets, to some evangelists, to some pastors and teachers. He then states generally the object for which they were given—for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for to edify the body of Christ—the general services of the Church—and then, in the passage which I have selected, more particularly he declares, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man." All Churches, all ordinances, all doctrines, all sorts of moral teachers, are ordained of God for the sake of making a perfect man. And Christianity may be said to be in a general way the art of being whole men in distinction from partial men and make-believe men. It is not enough to say that Christianity tends to make men better. It does that, but on the way to something higher. Its aim is to develop perfect manhood. "Till we all come unto a perfect man." That manhood cannot be reached except in Christ Jesus. This is not merely saying that man needs divine help to be all upward striving, which is strictly true. It is teaching that human nature developed perfectly becomes divine. We hold a nature in common with the divine nature. When we can work it out, free it from the accidental, the transient, the local, what is left is divine. Christ is divine, it is true. No man can be divine in scope, in degree, but in kind he may. Every oak tree in the nursery is like the oak of a hundred years, not in size, but in nature it is just as much an oak as the biggest. We are not divine in magnitude nor divine in scope, nor divine in power; we have common nature with God and we. And this not by a figure. Really! One must not confound, then, Christianity and religion. Religion is the specific of which Christianity is the generic. The one is mere worship; the other far more comprehensive. Religion is a very noble partialism which is the implement of one part of our nature adapted to divine things, but Christianity including this and using it, takes note of all the other faculties as well, and seeks not to make men do right things, this is the end, but to create manhood in them. It would develope and perfect every power of body and every faculty of mind, and round out the whole into a perfect man. Religion did not attempt to do that, religion does not attempt to do that. Religion teaches man to pray and worship, to be obedient, to venerate, but Christianity teaches men to be men all over. Doing this it does all other things besides. Religion framed just men; Christianity holy men. Religion saves men; Christ makes them worth saving. The noble religion of the Hebrew framed men for an earthly commonwealth; Christ brought in immortality and trained men for an earthly commonwealth in order that they might become inhabitants of a higher, a heavenly commonwealth. It was because the full development of manhood required more room, new and higher formative influences, that there was a new dispensation superimposed upon the former one. It is to this fact of Christianity that I would call your attention to-day, viz., the Christian idea of perfect manhood.

And, first, consider what the nature of this manhood must be. In some respects it is predetermined by the nature of man. It is not a manhood that is to lie outside of the faculties with which we are already endowed. Grace and the divine spirit certainly recreate us, but they add nothing organic to the nature of men. Perfect manhood will require harmonious development of all parts of man's mind and body as God already made them, and so the perfect character is predetermined in some sense. There is nothing superfluous in man, there is nothing too much, there is nothing too little. There is no appetite inflixed in our constitution but is useful; there is no superfluous passion, there is no force, or faculty or function that is not indispensable. The body itself is sacred, whatever man may have thought it necessary to say respecting it, and is to be cherished and honored. The great ground instincts of our nature, from which spring such infinite mischiefs by their misrule, are nevertheless indispensable conditions of power, and of power in the higher range too. The social affections, the will, the intellectual and the artistic and æsthetic departments of our nature, all these, but each in its rank and degree, are component elements of the true Christian manhood. Hear Paul: "And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus." There is breadth for you. Manhood with him meant everything that it pleased God to put in man. And Christianity was never designed to dry up, to eliminate any faculty, but to give them expansive power to make more of them, not less. Self-denial itself, which is commanded, is but interior discipline by which the higher faculties keep under the lower. There is a crucifying of the flesh—it is called—a slaying and destroying, but this is not to be taken literally. Our business is not to lessen, but to regulate; not to destroy, but to educate and control everything that it has pleased God to give us. There is to be no such ascetic notion as would attempt to throw out any part of man's nature because he would be better without it than with it. A man may be embroiled to limit his pride, but no man should destroy his pride. It may be necessary for a man to bring down somewhat the mountain of his firmness or obstinacy, but no man would be good for anything who had not some portion of obstinacy in him to use upon occasion. It may be necessary to restrict one's vanity, but a man who did not love praise would not be a full man. There is not one single element in the mind or the body, but it is necessary to a complete mind and body. There is no faculty, no impulse, no part of the mental economy, that was not adjusted with deliberate intent. One is struck in reading the letters of Paul how much he keeps in mind four points. First, totality, the whole man; next, symmetry, well proportioned, balanced, excellent; next, power. "A true Hebrew, Paul seems to have had lite-energetic condition of each of the several parts and of the complete whole; and, lastly, quality, or, as it may be called, beauty of character, the grace of the heart, the love of God, characterized the Greek mind. There is little evidence that art or nature produced upon him any esthetic impression. But I know not where, in what nation, was displayed such a sense of the beauty of moral character. He was not enough the dry and fleshly physical he is in nations; it must have great of action, it must have spontaneous action, it must have a continuity of action. Love is commanded, but it must be love without disparagation." The ten thousand arts which seem to come so wishing in love are to be laid aside, and it must become pure as the sky in summer. Generosity is commanded, but he that gives with one eye will be miserly. Be cheerful, but be cheerful as he does not do it as many rich men do—like the hen who just lays an egg and then cackles. (Laughter.) And so through all the catalogue of manly qualities. It was not enough that man should have the qualities—they must have them in proportion. It was not enough that they should be strong and efficient; they must be beautiful as well, they must have grace as well as power. It is then the Christian ideal of manhood to develope man's nature in every part. A true man after Christ will be the most powerful, noble, beautiful being upon the earth, the freest, the most joyous, the most fruitful. No picture was ever painted, no statue was ever sculptured, no work of art was ever conceived, half so beautiful as the living man thoroughly developed upon the pattern of Christ Jesus. Let us, then, think upon the standard of manhood set before us and aspire. And first, to live well for the life to come, is the surest way to live well for this world; and to live rightly for this world is the surest way to live rightly for the life to come. We are placed in circumstances in this world such that the things both go together, and we must receive them. They come in upon us by every one of our senses, and must excite thought, and take up much of our time. Our duties spring out of the right using of the natural world, and that civil society organized upon the natural world, and he who seeks to be a Christian by eschewing these duties, by cutting away from civil life, founded upon the natural life, seeks to divorce what God has joined together. Some men seem to think that all of morality is simply justice between man and man, and that if we live rightly here all will be right hereafter. There is a speck of truth in this, and so there is a speck of truth in the idea of others who think that if a man would live widely he must forsake the world, perverting that beautiful saying of the Apostle, that we should keep ourselves spotless from the world. These two must be kept together still. Men dispute which is of most importance, the forward sight upon a gun or the hind sight. In its place each is the most important. If you would take true aim you must draw the fore sight through the hind sight. And men dispute whether we shall gain the next world only or this also when we must gain the next world through this. This is the only world that we can live in at present. Human society, human love, human government is your present means of grace. This world is your drill-ground. But these means of grace are to be used as mere use machines. The potter does not expect that clay will become part of the machine, that he may put it in and fashion it at once as he would. It is to be refined by the machinery and through the furnace. It is finally formed hard and grinding and heat. And we are in this world to be fashioned by its grinding. Our multiplied industries, our social customs, arts, sciences and politics are so many influences that are chiseling and chipping and reaping us. Life and all occupations in life are so many means of grace. Sunday Schools are a means of grace; but among the poorest of them churches are a means of grace; but the toil of the hands and the labor of the understanding and the contact of business and mingling dealings with men and with things—these all are prior means of grace, and of greater efficacy. If a man is a good man only in church and Sunday school, he is a poor man. He ought to be good there; he must be a true man that is not good in church; his is the ideal of manhood. Moral strength is tried, it is by temptation that we are strengthened and vitalized, and made powerful to resist. It is through temptation that God calls us to be full-orbed men in Christ Jesus. The world is grandly constructed for developing full-orbed men. Know how to use it. But how base, how ignoble, are they who succumb in this world, who pass through the most wonderfully organized system of education uneducated, living not for manhood, but for carelessness, for pride, for selfish ends. How does a tool or a machine pass through various shops in its construction? It goes in a lump of pig iron and is melted and rudely shaped at first. In the second shop something is given of shape to it, nothing of finishes or polish. In the next shop it takes something more and more of the finishes; it is reduced in bulk. And still it goes through shop after shop to the number of perhaps twenty sets of hands, till at last it comes out a perfect tool at the other end. This is God's workshop my young friends. You have come from your shops, and there you have experience or avocation, and they are to take something from you or to put something in you that will make you fit for use. Blessed is the man that gathers so he goes, something of edge of temper, of symmetry, of beauty, of quality, so that when he leaves the furthest end he may be a perfect man. But see how men go out of this world. How, after childhood and home are past, most men gather little. Indeed, childhood and home constitute to some men the sum total of purity and virtue. They look back, not around or in them, for purity. They look back, not forward to look back for all goodness, with whom virtue is only a memory. How after childhood and home pass do men grow worse and worse in this world. I do not mean what are known as criminals. I mean men that are admitted into society, and who would be shocked if you said anything to their disparagement. How fast they are coming out of the various shops. One man comes out having sacrificed everything in life to his appetite. The elements of his being were moulded together, and he was put into the furnace, and that he might be brought out on the other side a man in Christ Jesus; but he barters himself all the way under temptations, and comes out a swine, grovelling, prone, wallowing, living for low animal indulgence. The world up has transformed that man into a beast. Is such anything so degraded as that? A man will be filled with resentment if you charge him with a lie, or with positive dishonesty, but he will stand and have the charge laid upon him of destroying body and soul, of having broken down health, of having squandered every noble faculty, lived mere and more for the sake of the brute, and now toward the end of life swollen with lecentiousness, about to die lower than the beast. Ah! no beast falls below his nature which is to be a beast, but may does. Another man secrifices all to power. Power is a noble thing, and if it comes to a man let him take it and use it. Ambition! A man without it will be as a man without a backbone. He needs stiffening. But power and ambition may be bought at too great a price. If a man carry his ambition, if he lay in right of what he is, let him take care. If God means him to be a leader, he will find it out. But if God has not meant him to be a leader, and he ranks one of a score down in the scale, and he yet by pretence, and art, and lying, thrust himself up, now on his back, now on all fours, now on his belly, to get a place and notoriety, and in doing so, has sold himself, justice, moderation, self-control, purity, the love of God and the love of his fellow men; he has learned the place that his evil ambition devised for him, but has lost his manhood. How many are there who have given up everything that is worth having for the sake of wealth! Riches are good things. The having of riches, however, is not so much to be desired, as the not having poverty. It is what riches cut off, rather than what they add to a man, that constitutes their value. They give a certain independence to a man; they give him power to create cultured ease, to draw around him sources of interest and pleasure. But riches may be bought at too high a premium. It is right to be rich and to seek riches, if God has ordained so, but not if a man has part of for money with all his manhood. And these are the men that we are expected to take off our hat to. Men that look superciliously down upon poor men, pity the man that, as they term it, stood in his own light, that was too just and honest to succeed in the manner they did. They think that they have led honor captive; they have dishonored and disgraced their essential manhood. It is a base thing for a man to be put into God's workshop and come out on the other side without a single excellence. It is enough for a man walking through the cities and towns, and who sees what beauty of manhood; it is enough to turn a man's head into fountains of tears. And yet this world was made on purpose to make men purer, to grind them into shape, to temper and polish them. Woe be to the man that is burned or crushed in the process, and goes into the rubbish of the universe. I call you, secondly, young men, to Christian life, not merely because it is the way of duty, but because it is the only way into which you can find your own selves. There are no lives springing from the eternal governments of God; springing from His rightful authority, but there are none results springing from your own selves. No man can be a whole man that is not a Christian. Not that a man becomes a Christian by becoming a member of the Church, but I call men to Christ because man, in the Christ Jesus is the true ideal of manhood. There is an impression current that religion is a life of restriction, that it is a pent-up, imprisoned way, full of inconvenience and loss, which we are to be made up to us hereafter, and that outside of the Christian life there is a certain liberty and variety and joyousness. Men may have this, but it is not the liberty of a man. Man is free till he has learned to live in his higher nature, and the free Christian has a creed that creates joy and liberty. It is only in learning to be a Christian that the life is tendered free and joyous. It is in our own nature we are cribbed and confined. Religion is also. When a language is spoken it is become a source of knowledge and enjoyment, but the learning of it is tedious. In learning to be a man it is in true that there is much to be learned, and so do some feel that the work of life is a tedious one. But all this is nothing but the higher nature rebelling against the lower nature, the new one against the old, the spiritual against the lower one, in manhood. While breaking in the lower nature there is, there ought to be, suffering; but when a man has at last his own nature, he lives right. Blessed is when a man has obtained the highest command of the animal nature, using it for force, not for learning. When a man has learned to live in the affections and moral sentiments, and to move broad as thought itself upon the wings of the understanding, there is no man that can measure with him for joy, for luxury and self-respect, and for all liberty. No man is so free as the man that belongs to himself. Such a man does not tell the truth because the public sentiment is against lies. He tells the truth because the truth is sweeter to him than lies. He does not do noble things because it is advantageous to be honorable, but because there is an intrinsic beauty in it which he loves. Do men like concord in music? Because the musical brain so lay it down that certain notes sounded together are pleasant? Man loves harmony because it is a law of their being. I hold that everything in a true Christian man does is in consistency with the fundamental notions of what is good in the human soul, and so man is so much in accordance with himself as the Christian, and therefore no man is so freely joyous. Men have come to think that laughers are more sorrowful than smiles. No, no. Laughing is the result of divine joy. There are men that think that sorrow has something in it more wonderfully divine than joy. Sorrow is divine, but joy was divine first. Joy is more divine than sorrow, for joy is break and sorrow is melting. I hold that the true Christian man is the radiant man, the strongest man, the freest man, the happiest man. I want you thirdly to discriminate clearly between God's man and the Church's man. I do not call you to be men in the Church or men according to the sects, whether prevailing in times past or now prevailing. I do not speak in disparagement of the churches, for I regard them as any other machines. The churches are like anything else, to be regarded according as they do. That is the best church which makes the best men. It makes the difference in watchmaking when you get the watch from. If it were submitted whether the best watches were made in Germany, or France, or England, or Belgium, or America, how would you test it? By hearing arguments and logical reasoning on the subject? No, you would take the watches and try them, and judge that that country had the best watchmakers that sent the best watches. Now, that sect is the best that makes the most apostles, that turns out the best men. That is the best sect for everybody. And the plain common sense of one time will are long enforce that upon the churches themselves, and it will be understood that God's manufacture of men ought to be tested by the wares they turn out. I call you not to a living church, although churches are to be used, although you are, I trust, one and all of you, to be found at the altar, bowed reverently to Immanuel, yet after all my modest man is not the narrow, local partial model which prevails uniformly in every sect. For you must be larger than all of them; man is bigger than everything by which he grows. A man is bigger than the common school in which he is educated. A candlestick holds the butt of the candle, but it does not hold the light. Institutions of every kind are but men-makers. I would not therefore urge religion upon you, meaning Methodism, or Congregationalism, or Episcopalianism, or High Church, or Low Church, or Middle Church. I urge none of these things at all. Any man's gentleness is good enough to grind your ax. Any church is good enough for you, if it is the church no one of them is universal, none is preeminent over the rest, all are but so many schools, seminaries, colleges, in which you are to be educated. Your manhood must always be larger than any sect; it must be bigger than church, and yet it is true that a man of churches is not of hotels to live in, but to take food and refreshment in and go on to the Father's house. Do not narrow and demean yourselves so much as to feel that any single sect or denomination is as big as you need and that you can fill it with your life. God did not call you to be birds to hop and sing. God called you to fly in the face of the sun over continents. Be large then, be strong, be wise, be pure and be loyal as God has called you, you are the sons of God. I use this truth again, as a master of the gentleman, to ask you to discern between the true man and the current gentleman of life. A man must be a Christian who would be a gentleman. A man who is a gentleman should be a Christian. The current gentleman may have much in him that is good in single qualities; in single exercises he may surpass. But if a man is not a gentleman to a single person, we expect him to do better than the gardener, who includes the whole range of society. And there are men that pride themselves on their honesty and truthfulness, and their whole character does not give that one quality. Would you consider that a well-developed man whose nose was developed at the expense of the rest of his features? (Laughter.) He is a well-developed man none of whose parts are out of proportion. A gentleman is as the lawyer and the merchant and every other man in some particular quality, because he devotes his whole soul to it; but to be a true gentleman requires that one should be a whole man. Is he a gentleman who has no higher aim in life than that of routine, of business, of pleasure, of science, of knowledge, without yearnings, aspirations for good without growth in faith, purity, love? Can you make up a gentleman by cutting a man in two and then leaving out the better half? And yet what higher claim have thousands for being gentlemen? The Christian ought to be a gentleman. Because he is true and right in heart it does not follow that he should be rude and gross in manner, or indifferent to those about him. Let me, in the first place, beseech you to avoid a class character for manhood. In communities like our own, where certain elective affinities draw men into classes, the worst evils ensue. For classes are very apt to be arrogant and deceitful. Men that belong to a set or class think that wisdom shall die with them. They think that they have "the disease of the world." They think that such tests of thought are the very squares of existence. Beware of classes. Join them just as a man joins a wood and his way through it. Go in them but through them. Use them not; let them use you. Be larger than any class. Beware, once more, of the arrogance of profession and of the professional character, which will be your temptation. For although pride of profession and esprit de corps may be turned to good account, yet pride and vanity tend to spoil all things and make them harmful and hurtful. No profession has so many chances to make men manikins has. No man can afford to live on one profession. Good as any profession may be, you will be obliged, in the way of business, to live in it as much as is useful. Ministers should not be too much with ministers. Lawyers should not consort with lawyers, soldiers should seek the society of civilians. Teachers, men that deal in ideas, should talk with men that deal in wares. Men need mixing; you are not to be educated out of your fellow men but for them. No man belongs to those below him as much as the educated, the rich to the poor, the powerful. For as much as rich you are their servant. "He that is chief among men, let him be the servant of all," saith the apostle.

And so, for the time is already spent and I must speedily bring to a close these remarks by which I would fain urge you to a purer, sweeter, nobler manhood, delivering you from the temptations which are in the flesh, delivering you from the temptations of your own dispositions, delivering you from the temptation, which inhere peculiarly in your profession and business in life, I fain would excite in your minds a higher conception of manhood as it is in Christ Jesus. I would furnish sufficient for you such incitements, because in some sense there is a work given to you as soldiers which is given to no others. You ought to be better than most men, because your work is vicarious; you labor for the Government, you stand for the country. It is for you to be the right hand of the executive hand of the Government of the land. You need not be cruel because you are warriors. For war may be discipline; it is the symbol of justice, of law, of liberty, of society. We have but just passed through a war that with all its incidental cruelties and its horrors of detail will be looked back upon when we have drifted so far that we can see it in perspective as a sublime struggle for national unity, for liberty, for human happiness; and all the blood-drops, and all the tears, and all the wrecks and desolations will pass out of view, but no man can measure the abundance of that good which will spring up in consequence of it. You are a part of the Government; it behooves you to represent to men something more than common men do. It is yours to guard the flag which is now more to tell the world than any other flag. Now, thank God, it is clean. Once there was blood upon it; not a drop now. Once the stars that were in it were but lights with the background of barbaric slavery—lights visibly shining out of midnight; now they are the stars of hope the world over. And those stripes on the flag are no longer stripes of cruelty and bloodshed; they are the surveal light that plays upon land and sea as you bear it round the globe. It is a blessed thing to be the guardian of it. You belong to a profession hereafter honorable not alone by the sacred. Already in our land we have the heroes and thousands who have sprung from the loins of this venerable school, upon whose name rests glory and immortality for their skill, for their endurance, for their valor, for their patriotism, for their sacr

ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The True Point Made Clear—English Conduct in the Rebellion—The Precedent of Rebel Belligerents—The End—A Chapter in American History—True Principle of Settlement.

THE BREECHES, Wednesday, June 9, 1869.

After all the discussion about our relations with England, there is still a point which, it seems to me, has not been made clear enough, either as to American feeling or English responsibility. I will endeavor to explain it. It is the action of England in regard to a great principle of international policy. It does not grow out of law, but out of facts.

The state of facts in the war was this: A portion of our country was in rebellion or insurrection. It matters not whether this was a great or a small part. It was what Mr. LINCOLN characterized it—an insurrection against the Government. Well, no sooner had that insurrection got under full weigh, than the British Government recognized those insurrectionists, rebels, or whatever you choose to call them, as equal belligerents with the Government against which they rebelled! By that act they compelled our Government to treat the rebels as equals in some, entitled to all the laws of war. Now, observe that one nation can know another only through the Government, and that the English Government, while it kept a Minister at Washington, had no right to know any portion of the American people, officially, except through the Government. In defiance of this clear principle of public law, the British Government acknowledged the rebels as equal with the very Government to which they had accredited their Ambassador! Mr. GLADSTONE, the present Premier of England, publicly said that JEFFERSON DAVIS had created a nation. Of course, this was nonsense, which GLADSTONE lived to see repent of. But, mark you, this proved beyond controversy the true feeling of the British people at that time. In perfect consonance with this, Lord JOHN RUSSELL, then Premier and head of GLADSTONE's party, elevated, so far as the British Government had the power, the rebels against the Government to which they were formally sending an Ambassador, into an equality with this Government! Probably no greater national insult was ever offered to any Government. At that moment the British Minister should have been ordered to leave Washington. But in the great, momentous conflict we had on hand, prudence required that Mr. LINCOLN should do exactly what he did—hide the nation's indignation under the mere covering of diplomatic courtesy. It was wise. We could afford to leave time to right such wrongs as that, and, be assured, they will be righted. But let us bear calmly every excuse and motive by which the British Ministry attempts to vindicate its conduct. The first reason given was, that McFERRAND had recognized the rebels as belligerents, by blockading the rebel ports. This is downright nonsense. If a Government has not a right to shut its own ports, what has it a right to do? Blockading is only shutting the ports—a right which our Government may exercise at any moment of peace. The next reason is, that some of these our people might be implicated; what business had their people in rebel ports after they were blockaded? Such were the flimsy and worthless excuses made for the conduct of the British Government in aiding, as far as it could, an insurrection against the Government of the United States. No man of common sense ever supposed it to be the result of any other principle than a jealous hatred of this country, willing to destroy, but afraid to strike while the wounded lion was yet alive. Now, observe that I hold the British Government had a right to do all this if it chose to take the consequences. The feeling which any foreign nation has toward us is no cause of war, and no ground for extra charges in a bill of damages. But it is evidence of the animus by which damages were caused, and a caution as to the manner in which such a nation shall be treated. If the British Government had not chosen to be friendly with us in a great national crisis, be it so; but let them not have the impudence and the hypocrisy to claim friendship as their battery for such acts as these; or to set up the laws of nations as a protect. Here let me say there are no laws of nations applicable in this matter to the United States. This Republic stands unique among nations, and by the principles of its existence cannot be subjected to any laws made by Monarchical Governments. Besides which, except in the Prize Courts, there are no authorities on public law, except public writers—such as GROTIUS, VATTEL, PUFFENDORF, &c. No Government has any right to know rebels in another country till they are prepared, by recognizing them as independent, to take part with them in the war. And, now, one of the main questions in our controversy with England is, whether their conduct in our rebellion shall be a precedent in future rebellions against established Governments? For my part I am willing to be the one island, and take that precedent as our law when England or a Province of France shall rebel. The time is not far when the force of that precedent will enable us to cover the ocean with privateers under rebel flags. We can hide our sins. Can England afford it? Can France afford it? Europe wants the barbarous principle of putting rebels and pirates and incendiaries on a level with regular governments let them have it. They shall drink that cup to its dregs. They are the inventors of the poison, and they shall swallow it. As to the case of the Alabama, nothing can be plainer. Mr. LAIRD, in a recent letter, states what probably hundreds of witnesses could have proved without him, that the Alabama was fitted out in open daylight as a war vessel, intended for the Confederate service; and that the Custom-house officers were on board every day, and the Government knew perfectly well what the object of that vessel was. The Government purposely made itself liable for the damages caused by her. I say purposely, for go back to that day and you will see that the rebels expected to triumph, and that the Government of England and France expected so also. When the Kearsarge sunk her opponent, the boats of English officers were round to take up the pirate crew. The Americans who were in London and Liverpool heard the loud and constant sympathy of the British with the rebels. No doubt the prevalent feeling in England—that which influenced the Government—was that the great object of dividing the United States would be accomplished without their assistance, and therefore the expenditures of a War were unnecessary. It was this feeling which caused the inches of the Government in the case of the Alabama. With the feeling we have nothing to do; but with the action we have. England is clearly liable for all the damages done by the Alabama, and all the incidental damages growing out of it.

The speech of Mr. SUMNER was not a speech of rhetoric. It had as little rhetoric in it as any good speech I know of. It was a speech of facts. It does not follow, however, that because England has made herself liable to such an immense amount, that we must press our claims to an extreme point. This is never wise, and certainly not magnanimous. Nor does it follow that we must go to war in order to get reparation. Time is the great avenger. Time will bring its revenges for us and for all nations who seek to do justice. Let that precedent stand unsullied, and the sun will not rise with more certainty than that England will be made to suffer tenfold what she inflicted. Nations have to be punished for their sins in this world, and history is full of the most awful punishments by which the Providence of God has administered justice upon nations for their wrongs, cruelties and iniquities. The articles in the British newspapers show that they are quite misunderstanding us as heretofore; and as badly as ever. It seems impossible to teach them a single correct idea of the principles and motives of the American people. The English papers say that after the rejection of the treaty by our Senate, and the speech of Mr. SUMNER, any European power would have declared war; as the consequence. Why? Can we not neglect; and can we not wait for the full maturity of settling a blow? Of all look without people in the world the native Americans are the most lazy. They have slept in a forty year war, and in which we think, while keep accounts. Whatever may they may be. But there is a charge in all history which should have been known to foreign writers, and which may be applied for our own benefit; and which is exactly in point as to our probable conduct.

After the adoption of our Constitution, and many years after the peace of 1783, the British held forts within our territory, and refused to give them up; not only this, their officers and agents gave arms and ammunition to the Indians, and incited them against the whites of this country. Soon after this BONAPARTE issued his Berlin and Milan decrees, and England in return her Orders in Council, and by which American ships and seamen were confiscated on every sea. No more attention was paid to American rights than if we had been South Sea Islanders. Then came the impressment of American seamen. During all this period the American Government was remonstrating, claiming its rights, asserting the justice of its cause, and demanding damages, and at last laying embargoes. At last, after twenty years of continual suffering and claiming, came war. In that war England lost every one of the claims which she had vaingloriously set up, and more, her prestige as a nation dominant on the seas.

This chapter of history is instructive upon the working out of such problems in this country. It shows, also, clearly, in its view, what the end is to be. The war as a just settlement is very plain. The United States can well afford not to demand money or contraband damages, and England can well afford to make some reparation for what she will know was a great wrong; and that reparation should include a settlement of the great question of belligerent rights, on rights. Of all Governments, Switzerland is the most interested in defending Government against rebellion. Does she mean to leave her precedent on record for the benefit of future rebels?

A VETERAN OBSERVER.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

—Beautiful Snow and Other Poems. By J. W. WATSON. (Philadelphia: TURNER BROTHERS & CO.) Most of the poems that compose this neatly-printed volume have already found many readers and admirers in the columns of two of our most widely-circulated weekly papers, and will be warmly welcomed in this more permanent form. Few newspaper poems lose their planting into books. They are generally forgotten as soon as read, without serious loss to literature. But these poems possess more than ephemeral interest. They display a lively and pleasant fancy, many of the qualities of true passion, and genuine, hearty sympathy with the joys and sorrows of humanity, while the versification is varied and flowing. The poem which lends its name to the book, "Beautiful Snow," treats a well-worn subject with originality and feeling at once delicate and intense. The despair of the wretched outcast as she watches the falling of the pure, beautiful, yet cold and unfeeling snow, and remembers that the was once as fair and pure, is depicted with true artistic effect:

> Once I was fair as the beautiful snow,
> With pure as the lily my soul,
> Once I wreathed the sky diamond gems,
> Beautiful as the stars of the pole.
>
> Father, Mother, ... all
> God and myself, I have sin by my fall.
> The virtue wrecked that once I cherished by
> Will follow me to my grave, for I whether go
> Or will I sink in an everlasting ... down
> To be and to the ... I know.
> There is nothing ... pure but the beautiful snow.

Such pieces as this and those entitled "Dead," "Ring Down the Drop," "Father Forgive," and "Missing," Private William Smith," take strong hold of the heart and memory, and will live long because they touch many chords of human sympathy. We have no doubt that the little volume will secure for Mr. WATSON's book a large and permanent circulation.

—Journal of Social Science: Containing the Transactions of the American Association. No. 1. June, 1869. (New-York: LEYPOLDT & HOLT.) There are few thinking men who will not hail this first step toward interesting the public in the labors of the Association, with real satisfaction. In no country more than in America, where the whole fabric of society is in a condition of growth and gradual development, is there opportunity to observe and collect the elements of life. And nowhere are there so many reading and thinking persons among the people, who are ready to be interested in the array and discussion of such gathered facts when they are presented with clearness and with direct bearing upon a purpose. In America there is not only a vast field for the material labor of the sociologist, but also a notable chance for accomplishing good by interesting a large reading public in the topics dealt with, and forming a strong public opinion for the support of such practical reforms as are brought into a condition of organization, gaining popular appeal for distinct and well-understood plans. The American Association is an organization which purposes to supply for America the very important work carried on in England and the European Continent by several similar associations, one of which indeed this year has grown. The Journal of the Association, in one very handsomely printed pamphlet, contains selected papers and reports read at various times before the Association. The various topics, all of vital and abiding interest, are discussed in the liberal spirit which science exacts of her votaries, aiming at positiveness only in matters of fact, and for the rest being content with suggestiveness. The ability of the authors shown in the table of contents are guarantees of valuable information and pertinent application of the same. The articles consist of a "Historical Sketch of Social Science," HENRY VILLARD; "Inspection of County Schools," JOHN D. PHILBRICK; "University Education," GOLDWIN SMITH; "Texas Cattle Disease," JOHN S. GOULD; "Public Charities," F. B. SANBORN; "Method of Diffusing Knowledge," HORACE GREELEY; "Protection of the Ballot," CHARLES F. ADAMS, JR.; "Civil Service Reform," SAMUEL RIZOR, (President of the Association;) "Some Topics in Criminal Law," HERMAN W. TOREEY; "People's Banks of Germany," HENRY VILLARD; "Economic Education," Anonymous; "Economic Results of the Emancipation of Serfs in Russia," N. TOURGENEFF, (the great advocate of that reform;) and, finally, fifty pages of General Intelligence, home and foreign, in all matters of Sociology. The range of topics is wide, the selections judicious, the treatment admirable. We wish the new-comer all success.

—Typhaine Abby. By Count A. De GORMEAU. Translated by CHARLES D. MEIGS, M. D. (PHILADELPHIA: CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER.) The translator has given an idiomatic and spirited version of this curious Tale of the Twelfth Century—a tale which is rather removed from the sympathies and particularities of the general run of readers. In reading any sort of a novel purporting to be historic in its character, people are almost always disposed to bring it into comparison with what Sir WALTER SCOTT has done in that line—a rather severe test, for very few historical romances can stand it. Mr. JAMES suffers terribly from it, and so does BULWER LYTTON, a writer of very clever in some other respects. Compare his Harold with Ivanhoe, or even with the Talisman. If to turn to the celebrated VICTOR HUGO we find his great historic romance, Notre Dame, written pretty much in the spirit of an antiquarian and Sixteenth-century student who would make the most of the antiquities of his dreams times, and bring in their social peculiarities to a purpose and critical, yet not offensive, historical interweaving them in a subordinate manner with the warp and woof of the story. This "Typhaine Abby" has an interior kind of resemblance to Notre Dame in that it, too, takes chiefly meant to illustrate the ways and thoughts of the people, as well as of the statesmen and priests of that crumbling Twelfth Century. The book is less a tale than a narrative, having some good points half wrought, but the genius to vivify does the natural life of that departed age is wanting. Typhaine is a very languishing. We feel that the work is in every interesting way, will give the reader some idea of that wild and wildful deluge of mediæval France, which are offered to us by MICHELETS and PROSPER MERIMEE and other writers of their tribe.

—Mr. PORTER's (Gay) By GRACE GAYLORD. (Boston: HENRY J. TILTON & CO.) This story for boys was certainly not strictly [illegible] and happy style. [illegible] of Britain and dreary rock as they usually [illegible] to sitting on the front seat of a wagon [illegible] the driver, and holding the whip from time to time.

—Hill to Hill. By JOHN ESTEN COOKE. (New-York: G. W. CARLETON.) The narrative or narratives of this book are written in a light, soldierly style, which seems to express very truly, perhaps, the dashing and reckless movements of the "Partisans," "Night-hawks," and all the rest of those who made themselves so busy and formidable on the debatable ground at the Shenandoah Valley, while EARLY and SHERIDAN were trying conclusions in it. It is curious to observe what vivacity and entertainment can be drawn out of a subject so entirely in itself so full of mischief and suffering and melancholy reminiscences. With regard to the literature of such things, we have no idea that "Colonel BURRY, of the Eagle's Nest," can write and describe as well and graphically as any of the other irreproachable people who drew pens and flourished them in the late controversy, which all sensible people will try to forget as soon as possible.

—Squad Instructor in the Bronchsword. By A. S. COLDSTREAM. (Philadelphia: LIPPINCOTT & CO.) Mr. COLDSTREAM offers, without being aware of it, very probably, a very serious and recondite recommendation of his book in the name he bears, the larger half of which, that is, its first five letters, having the meaning of "sword" in many old languages. It carries another certificate of a more modern and practical sort, in the capital of approval written by Vice-Admiral POTTER; and there is still another recommendation, very plain to us and all non-military critics, in the excellent plates, or, more properly speaking, cuts, which represent the various attitudes of the gladiator—the guards, the thrusts, the parries, the ripostes, the movements, &c. No doubt the book has, along with these, its intrinsic recommendations, too, all of which we very cheerfully take on trust, and so commit Mr. COLDSTREAM's little book to the favorable reception of all those who love sword-exercise.

—Unfortunes. A Novel. By BERKSDALE. (New-York: GEORGE S. WILCOX.) After guessing for some time to no purpose as the character of this book from a contemplation of the name, "Berridale," we opened it, and found that, though far from being brilliant, it has some feeling in it, with a moral and an attempt at character which, if "Berridale" is juvenile, have in them a certain amount of promise.

A CHARGE OF MATHEW.

WILLIAM J. COWPER, of No. 325 West-street, appearing before Justice DODGE, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, narrated how, in passing through Spring-street at 1 o'clock in the morning, when near Greene-street, he was attacked by JOHN BURKE, and how a rough-and-tumble fight ensued. Finally BURKE got Cowper under him on the pavement, and getting his little finger in his mouth, bit it off. The Police arrived at this juncture and BURKE was taken into custody. Being arraigned before the Magistrate he pleaded not guilty, but was held on the charge of mayhem and was committed in default of $2,000 bail for his appearance at the Court of General Sessions.

BALEFUL LARCENY.

The best savage called to answer before the active Magistrate was one JOHN SHELLY, who being employed to repair the roof of No. 240 Mott-street, Twenty-third street, found there a chemical apparatus worth $50, belonging to GEORGE W. GERMAN, of No. 710 Broadway, and which he is alleged to have delivered to a pawnbroker for the sake of selling the material to a dealer for a trifling sum. He declined to make any answer to the charge until advised by counsel, and was committed in default of $1,000 bail for trial at the General Sessions.

MADAME BYRON RELEASED.

It will be remembered that some weeks ago JOSIAHNE SCHUYLAUTE, better known, however, as Madame ELIZA BYRON, clairvoyant, was arraigned before Justice DODGE on a charge of false pretenses, made by Miss HERMINE E. GOULET. The case has been since pending under examination and a great amount of testimony taken in the Police Court. Yesterday the Magistrate rendered a decision in the case, and finding that the charge was frivolous and unsupported by evidence, and further, that it had been instituted from improper motives, dismissed the complaint and discharged the accused from further liability.

MRS. WHEATON ABANDONMENT CASE.

Some time since Mrs. ESSELINE WHEATON brought an action of abandonment against her husband, Dr. HENRY WHEATON, and the case attracted some attention in consequence of the high social connections of the wife and the official position of the husband, who was said to be both a Colonel and a Quarantine. The marriage was contracted in 1858, and the abandonment which is stated to have occurred in the year ago, is not denied by the defendant. The case has been pending for some weeks, and was not decided until yesterday morning, when Justice DODGE found for the plaintiff, and ordered the defendant to pay her $50 per week for her support, and also to give bond in the sum of $500 for his good behavior for one year.

ATTEMPTED MURDER AND MURDER.

EDWARD COWPER, knowing or having imagined that two of his female friends had been insulted by STEPHEN H. MALONEY, proceeded to fight it out with that person when he met him on the corner of Pearl and Park streets. MALONEY drew a pistol, which he fired at COWPER, but the ball whizzed harmlessly past his head; in consequence of which fact MALONEY was only required to answer for a felonious assault when arraigned before Alderman COMAN, at the Tombs, Saturday morning. Even that was beyond his ability, and he was committed in default of $1,000 bail for trial at the General Sessions.

A BELLIGERENT BRUTE.

At the hour when the day of peace began Jas. O'CONNELL, of No. 38 Rose-street, proceeded to beat his wife with such violence that her life was jeopardized. Her cries attracting the attention of Officer HAIGHT, of the Fourth Precinct, he went to her assistance, but was met at the door by O'CONNELL, who was armed with a butcher's cleaver, and threatened to beat in his head if he should attempt to enter. HAIGHT then grappled with the ruffian, but before he could secure him received several severe wounds on the head from the hatchet, but, fortunately, none proved to be dangerous. O'CONNELL was finally captured, and being taken before Alderman COMAN at the Tombs, yesterday, that acting Magistrate required $1,000 bail for his appearance at the General Sessions, which not being furnished, he was committed to prison.

WORDS AND WOUNDS.

JOHN SHELLY, of No. 32 Elizabeth-street, went into the saloon of JOHN LOFTUS, No. 138 Leonard-street, at an early hour yesterday morning, and soon succeeded in getting into a quarrel with LOUIS MCHARE, SPROULE, MATHEW MCGOWAN and JAMES CONNORS. Blows followed words, and SHELLY was run into the street pursued by the party. When he reached Baxter-street he turned upon SPROULE, who was foremost of his pursuers, and dealt him a blow with a knife which caused a severe scalp wound. At this moment the other men came up, and some of them plunged a knife in SHELLY's thigh so badly that only a flesh wound was caused. By this time the Police arrived, and, capturing the combatants, SPROULE was taken to his home, No. 184 Elizabeth-street, and the others, being unknown, were left for the remainder of the night. Captain JOURDAN's Station-house, were yesterday committed by Alderman COMAN, at the Tombs, for further examination.

FIRACY.

E. B. M. MORRISON, of the bark Annie, lying at Pier No. 1 in East River, at an early hour yesterday morning discovered one WM. SCHMITZ pulling off from the vessel in a small boat, in which was a chest of tea valued at $120, which had been stolen from the bark. He succeeded in overhauling and capturing the pirate, who was yesterday arraigned before Alderman COMAN, when he pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny. The prisoner is a ship carpenter, living at No. 20 Cherry-street. He was committed for trial at the General Sessions.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.

On the 24 of April last, GEORGE SCHEFF, aged 10 years, who lived in the house in the rear of No. 11 Cherry-street, was struck by some falling timber while playing in an old house on the opposite side of the street, which was being torn down, and received injuries from which he died yesterday. Coroner FLYNN held an inquest in the case.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT.

Two weeks since JAMES DAVIS, aged 17 years, was riding on a trunk in Hoboken, when a fellow-boy lying on the top of the trunk was caught in the spokes of the wheels, and, being drawn up with the trunk, broke Davis on the head, inflicting injuries from which he died on the 8 inst. Coroner FLYNN held an inquest in the case, and yesterday morning, and a verdict of accidental death was returned.

THE GRAND STREET CASUALTY.

An inquest was commenced by Coroner FLYNN, at the Fifth Precinct Station-house, in the case of [illegible] Lawrence, the boy [illegible] Saturday afternoon by being run over by a [illegible] Grand-street, on the Brooklyn City Railroad, in Greenwich-avenue, and it was [illegible] that the train which was driven by a Dan Sullivan, was going at a dangerous rate of speed, and that the usual precautions against accidents were not taken. At the time the boy fell under the car there were about fifty boys on the train, stealing a ride despite the exertions of the train hands to keep them off. It further appeared that one of the conductors in attempting to put some boys off at Twenty-first-street and Third-avenue had had his leg badly injured. Some further testimony was taken tending to exonerate the train hands, when Coroner FLYNN released THOMAS MCDONALD and PATRICK HALLIGAN, the engineer and conductor, upon their own recognizances, and adjourned the case until this morning.

ANOTHER STABBING AFFRAY.

Saturday night about 11 o'clock, a fracas occurred in the house of No. 36 Chambers-street, when ANDREW HEALEY was stabbed in the arm and side by a man named JOHNSON, who escaped arrest by immediate flight. Acting Police Captain could be found, Dr. DWYER was called, and, having dressed the wounds, was leaving the house in company with Mr. JOHN J. HOGAN, of No. 75 Johnson-street, Brooklyn, and was in the alley-way, when HOGAN was stabbed in the arm by some unknown man, who rushed past him and escaped.

YET ANOTHER ASSAULT.

Yesterday, about noon, PATRICK BLOOMFIELD going into the house, No. 36 East Houston-street, he was assaulted by EMMA SMITH, a colored cook, who struck him over the eye with a china bowl, making a deep cut. As he grappled with the woman, FRANK JOHNSON, the bandmaster, rushed out of one of the rooms, and dragging BLOOMFIELD into the house, beat and kicked him with great violence, until the arrival of Officer TAYLOR, of the Broadway Squad, put an end to his sport. JOHNSON and EMMA were taken before Inspector WALLING, at Police Headquarters, and were locked up to await an examination.

LOST AND FOUND.

About 4 o'clock yesterday morning, Officers FOLEY and FOWLER of the Sixteenth Precinct, saw two men in the lumber-yard at the foot of Twenty-fourth-street, North River, whose sudden flight when they approached induced them to search the yard, which was rewarded by finding three sheets of tea valued at $120. It was subsequently ascertained that the tea had been stolen from the store No. 254 Ninth-avenue, which had been entered by burglars during the night.

The Public Schools of the Tenth Ward.

Complaints are being presented continually to the Boards of Trustees and Education, of the over-crowded condition of the public schools of the Tenth Ward, in this City, but more particularly of Primary School No. 1, in Ludlow-street, which has the largest attendance of all the other schools. This ward teaches daily nearly 5,400 children, in four school buildings, while its neighbors—the Seventh and Fourteenth Wards—together teach only 5,600, in seven school buildings. There is no doubt but that the other two wards together, it has only twelve primary schools. The Ludlow-street building, referred to above, is nearly thirty years old, and is entirely unfitted for the requirements of to-day. Its walls are believed to be safe, but the interior arrangements are abominable. The class-rooms are small, and poorly lighted and ventilated, and, as a consequence, are very unhealthy. The stairways are narrow and fragile, and in case of a panic, serious accidents would certainly occur to the children; while in the event of a fire all means of escape by these means would be speedily cut off. Long ago, some children have been turned away from the Ludlow-street school, and from the Primary department of the Grammar schools of the ward, because of the insufficiency of accommodation; and this must continue until the evil shall have been remedied. The local board have repeatedly appealed to the old Board of Education to do something in the premises, but nothing was ever done. One of the School Commissioners, Henry AD. ROSE, was when applied to by a Trustee, made answer that "it is a complete mount of the dip! "Oh, the Tenth Ward is nothing but a low, manufacturing ward; it has no claims upon the consideration of our Board." It remains to be seen whether the new Board will do better for the long-paying of the Tenth Ward than did their predecessors of the old organization.

Unsafe Buildings.

The following buildings were reported to Mr. JAMES M. MAGORRIGAN, Superintendent of Buildings, as being in an unsafe condition, since last Monday:

Organization of a German Central Workingmen's Committee.

The festival delegates who had charge of the arrangements of the late German Workingmen's Festival, held a meeting at the Germania Assembly Rooms yesterday afternoon, when Mr. KUHR presided. The various committees submitted their reports; the Finance Committee, however, was not prepared to report, but it appeared that a surplus of at least $15,000 had been realized by the festival. A resolution was passed, declaring that the Committee shall continue to exist as a permanent Central Committee to cooperate with the Workingmen's Union of this City. Each society shall be entitled to representation by three delegates. Thus far there are twenty-three societies represented in this German Workingmen's Central Committee.

Base Ball—Games This Week.

The games announced for the present week are both numerous and important. Five first-class contests will take place, in addition to half a score of games between amateur organizations. To-day three matches are announced. The Eckfords and Athletics, of Brooklyn, will play at the Union Ground, the Atlantics and Alphas at the Capitoline, and the Empires and Socials at Hoboken. To-morrow the famous "Red Stockings," of Cincinnati, will play the Mutuals, and Wednesday the Atlantics and on Thursday the Eckfords. During the latter part of the week the noted "Haymakers" will pay their annual visit to the Metropolis, and engage in a series of contests with our leading clubs. On Friday they will play their return game with the Cincinnati Club. On Saturday the "Haymakers" and Eckfords will contest, and on the following Monday and Tuesday the "Haymakers" will play the Atlantics and Mutuals.

The Ladies' Union Aid Society.

The Ladies' Union Aid Society of the M. E. Church will hold their annual strawberry, ice-cream and floral festival on Monday and Tuesday evenings, June 14 and 15, at their Institution in Forty-second-street, near Eighth-avenue. The house recently purchased by the Society having been remodeled with the main building, and adapted to the purpose of an increasing family and for the accommodation of a greater number of male members, will be opened with inspection and varied exercises. Prominent clergymen from this City, Brooklyn and other places are expected to be in attendance on both evenings, and will deliver appropriate addresses.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

DIGEST IN THE SEYMOUR CASE—VIEWS OF JUSTICES NELSON, GRIER, AND FIELD—THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP—REMEDY FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—EQUITY JURISDICTION.

*Horatio Seymour et al., Heirs of Henry Seym price should fall below the point of profit in sending it to market. The number of Flour mills is rapidly on the increase in Michigan, Illinois and other Western States, and of this produce of Wheat, the direct supply of the New-England States by rail, through what are known as the Fast Freight Lines, without passing through New-York as going to Boston, is a growing business; so much so that some of our leading Grain and Flour factors are concerned about the prospective effect upon New-York as a distributing market for the Eastern States.

The price of Gold advanced about one per cent. on the last quotation of Saturday week, and Bills on London about ⅛ ⅌ cent., the latter being brought close up to the point at which it would pay the Bankers to ship American Gold Coin. These shipments, however, should they occur, will be unusually late in the season, and are not likely to last long. The partial rise in Gold last week was in the main of a speculative character on the stiff appearance of Exchange. It was made in the face of dear rates for Money to carry over balances, and partly in connection, it is supposed, with the bearish movement against the Stock Market, the Gold being used to absorb and practically "lock up" Currency, and at the same time the Gold itself withheld to some extent from the use of the Bank averages.

In regard to the receipts of Gold from California, we shall soon have to discontinue our comparative table, owing to the change of route to the great overland railway. We find on inquiry among our Bankers that they are now receiving the bulk of their San Francisco remittances in this way, and the last Aspinwall steamer of the Pacific Mail brought only $75,000 for New-York. It is by no means certain that the same cause may not, after awhile, affect the receipts of Gold at San Francisco, by diverting the Gold in its crude state from the mines in the interior near the line of the railway to the Philadelphia Mint or New-York Assay Office, in place of San Francisco.

The Money disturbance of the week was, to all appearances on Saturday, greatly altered, if not altogether over by the close of the week. Most of the Railway Stocks had recovered the heavy decline of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, and the Public Funds, which at no time had seriously felt the pressure, closed firm. The break down in the Mariposa speculation will prove of longer continuance so far as getting the stock back to late prices, but a reaction of 5 ⅌ cent. from the lowest figure was marked at the close of the week. In Pacific Mail the speculation was bullish through the tightest Money demands, and as soon as these were modified, the stock ran up to 93¾@94 ⅌ cent. The Western Railway receipts, for the first week in June, assisted the recovery of prices, while the conferences and arrangements understood to be now going on for making the Hudson and Central one line, gave buoyancy to the New-York Stocks on Saturday.

At the present rate of emigration from the Old World, we are likely to have material for transforming several of our Western Territories into new States, this year, without diverting the natural increase of population from the old States. It is probable, however, that much the greater portion of the present arrivals, consisting of the hardy people of the North of Europe—Danes, Swedes and Norwegians—as well as the usual proportion of German and Irish—will settle in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, &c. We copy from our own records the following figures of emigrant arrivals at this port in May and June, this year and last:

Week.	1869.	Week.	1869.
May 1	10,662	May 15	8,555

Excess	$11,023,250	$13,945,050	$19,000,000
Rate for Money	7 ⅌ cent.	7 ⅌ cent.	4 ⅌ cent.

The sales of Gold through the day were at 139¼@139¾@139¼@139⅝@139⅞ ⅌ cent., finally closing, as on Friday night, 139¾@139⅞ ⅌ cent. The market was comparatively free from excitement, with less pressure of Cash Gold, which was carried over on easier terms than on Friday. The Banks make little or no gain on their weekly average of Gold, and lose on their Greenbacks $2,450,000; the general line of Deposits being down $8,287,000, and Loans decreased $2,028,000. The Treasury, during the week, received for Customs $2,122,612; paid out $612,143 for Interest on the Public Debt, and sold $2,000,000 Gold on Monday and Thursday. The Money market worked decidedly better for borrowers than on Thursday and Friday, although not yet restored to entire ease at 7 ⅌ cent. The Public Funds were something firmer in quotations, without decided activity either on the Street or at the Government Board of the Exchange.

The Import Entries for the past week, including the Dry Goods return in our last paper, amount to $5,636,850, against the total entries of $5,613,035 same week last year. The Export Clearances of Domestic Produce amount to $6,808,780, against $8,846,870 same week last year. The Export of Specie amounts to $400,024, against $2,067,231 same week last year. The Customs of the week are $2,122,612. The receipts of Cotton, coastwise and by railroad, are 8,649 bales. The number of emigrant passengers arrived during the week, 11,779.

The Gold values of the Import Entries of Foreign Merchandise, at New-York, since July 1, 1868, are as follows, the figures being official to May 1, and since, semi-official from the Customhouse—the entries of Foreign Specie being omitted:

The Stock Exchange was almost exclusively occupied with the Railway speculation and Pacific Mail. The latter gave the bearish sellers of the past few weeks a sudden and rather sharp surprise by advancing rapidly from 86¾ to 90¾@90⅞ ⅌ cent., the price closing 90⅞ ⅌ cent. The New-York and Western Roads were nearly all firm, and many of them quite buoyant. New-York Central touching 199 ⅌ cent., Northwest Preferred, 97, ex-dividend, (equal to 103,) and the Common, 86¾, ex-dividend, (equal to 91¾ ⅌ cent.) the Hudson River sold up to 109 ⅌ cent. The general market, after being partially shaken on the Bank Statement, (as corrected from the first report of the Specie average,) recovered to nearly the highest prices of the day, and closed firm.

After the Boards, the dealings in the Long Room and on Broad-street in front of the Exchange, resulted in the following quotations as compared with Friday night:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

It is reported that at a Cabinet meeting held in London Saturday, Mr. MOTLEY announced the rejection of the Alabama Claims Treaty by the American Senate, and expressed the earnest desire of the Government for a removal of the matters in difference by a treaty that will do justice to all parties.

Immense Tory meetings were held in different parts of Great Britain Saturday, and strong protests against disestablishment were adopted. The cable reports that at the Manchester meeting over 200,000 persons were present, and at the Liverpool demonstration 50,000.

Numerous arrests were made in Paris Saturday, but no general disturbance took place. Advices received old London, and dated last night, reported that tranquillity had been restored.

In the Spanish Cortes, Saturday, General PRIM warmly defended the Mexican people against a charge of cowardice, and announced that soon diplomatic relations with JUAREZ would be resumed. The Duke of MONTPENSIER had returned to Spain and was in Andalusia.

Dispatches from Calcutta, dated June 3, state a severe cyclone had occurred there and in the vicinity, doing great damage to the buildings in the city and the shipping in the river below. The damage to the shipping in the harbor was very slight. At the last accounts the cyclone was still raging.

CUBA.

Reports from Havana confirm previous accounts of heavy fighting at Puerto Padre, but no details are given, and we are left in the dark as to which side won the advantage.

A party of filibusters, recently landed at Port Battiquel, were surprised by a force of Spaniards, to whom their movements had been betrayed, and defeated with great loss. Those who were not killed were taken prisoners. Two millions of dollars in unsigned revolutionary bonds were among the spoils.

GENERAL.

Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER preached the sermon to the graduating class at West Point yesterday. He painted the "perfect gentleman" and pointed his moral by declaring that a true soldier ought to be the highest type of the "perfect gentleman," but arguing that there could be no perfection except through the teachings of Christianity. Only the latter portion of the sermon alluded in any way to politics. He spoke of the friendship and united action during the closing hours of the war of GRANT, SHERMAN, SHERIDAN, THOMAS and MEADE as a most remarkable evidence of the superiority of American soldiers.

Advices from Arizona report that 300 Indians had attacked a train of Government stores en route for Camp Grant. They killed three men and wounded three others, and, having set the escort to flight, captured and destroyed the wagons and contents, valued at about $20,000.

The Commissioner of Patents, S. S. FISHER, has sustained the decision of the Chief Draughtsman of Patents, refusing to issue a patent of JOHN W. COCHRAN for improvement in breech-loading guns, chiefly on the ground that COCHRAN's original application in 1860 was withdrawn by him and was not again renewed until 1868, after his improvement had been largely used in various ways. The Commissioner virtually decides in this case that an application once withdrawn is an abandonment of the claim.

A duel was fought in North Carolina Saturday, between Capt. W. C. CAMERON, of Petersburg, Va., and Mr. R. W. HUGHES, of Richmond, Va. The affair followed the publication by CAMERON, a professional journalist, of an article denouncing his adversary. CAMERON was wounded in the breast severely, but not dangerously.

The wife of JOHN F. COYLE, one of the proprietors of the National Intelligencer, died in Washington last night.

Minister CURTIN gave a farewell reception Saturday in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, and in the evening was serenaded with a complimentary banquet at the Academy of Music, at which a public company was present. The congratulatory dispatch from the Czar of Russia, received at the banquet, is printed elsewhere.

The stockholders of the Belfast and Moosehead Lake Railroad have decided to lease their road to the Maine Central Company for a term of fifty years.

A letter from Chief Justice CHASE, received in Washington, gives a flattering account of the improved condition of South Carolina. He says the people are fast recuperating from the effects of the war, and if permitted, would soon be thriving and prosperous. He had his daughter have been treated everywhere with the greatest respect and kindness.

General Grant's Administration—Public Sentiment in Regard to It.

The hostile clamor against General GRANT's Administration has in good part died away. Democratic partisans continue to denounce it as a failure, but this is partly from the force of habit and partly in the hope of party profit. But the disposition which, at one time, seemed quite general among Republicans to disparage and decry it has given place to a temper at once more hopeful and more just. It seems at last to be felt that the Administration has had as yet nothing like a trial,—that three months, under any circumstances, is not time enough to test either the justice or the wisdom of any Administration, and that the circumstances which have surrounded the beginning of General GRANT's term have been especially unfavorable to the formation of a just and dispassionate judgment.

The expectations of the public, in the first place, were extravagant and unreasonable. General GRANT's great military renown, and the reputation his services in suppressing the rebellion had given him, inspired an undue estimate of what he could do as President, and led the people at large to expect from him whatever the country might need from any department of the Government and in any branch of public affairs. It was forgotten that the department he had been called to fill was at best one of limited power, restricted by the Constitution to the execution of the laws of Congress, and greatly curtailed even in that, by recent legislation and by constant encroachments of the other departments of the Government. At the outset of his Administration, moreover, he encountered what must always be, so long as our present system exists, an enormous difficulty to every new Administration, the redistribution of official patronage. This has probably been a greater embarrassment to him than to any of his predecessors since the beginning of the Government. The war had multiplied enormously the number of offices to be filled, and had, at the same time, increased enormously the number of applicants for them. Party spirit had grown more and more exacting, more and more selfish and less disposed than ever to give patriotic consideration, in judging the motives of public men, to the welfare of the country. The Republican party had become largely venal and less patriotic than ever before. The greed for office had become more universal, more clamorous, more intolerant and more unreasonable.

Under these circumstances it was scarcely possible that General GRANT should not fail to meet the expectations of the country. Unquestionably he did fail, and it is quite certain that any other man in his place would have failed quite as badly, and probably much worse, than he did.

But the country has come to understand that the appointments to office of the first quarter of a new Administration afford no just test of its capacity or character. General GRANT disappointed the country, we think, in abandoning so hastily the policy with which he set out, of making honesty and fidelity in the performance of duty the sole tenure of office, and by surrendering so soon and so absolutely as he did, to political cliques and factions the power of dictating removals and appointments. But it may be doubted whether he could have done otherwise. Political parties were too strong for him. He could only resist their dictation with the certainty of a prolonged contest, in which he was by no means sure of winning, and which would have added greatly to the difficulties and embarrassments of his position.

That matter, at all events, is disposed of, and the Administration is now free to give its attention to the graver matters which involve the public welfare and upon which the question of its success or failure must really turn. While no effective action can be taken on these matters until the meeting of Congress, and while Congress will then be more directly responsible for them than the President, it will be for him to recommend such measures as he may deem best adapted to meet the public necessities and to promote the public interests. He has assured the country that he shall have a policy on all public questions,—and although it will not be forced or urged in defiance of the convictions or wishes of the people, the character and scope of his recommendations will afford the true criterion by which his Administration will be judged.

So far as we can judge by past indications, there is no reason to fear that the action of the new Administration will not be adequate to the public wants, and fully meet the expectations of the country. It has done much already to give effect to the policy of reconstruction adopted by Congress, and to adapt its execution to the wants and necessities of the Southern States; and there is every reason to believe that before the first term of President GRANT shall have half expired, harmony of feeling and of action will have been restored to the sections so recently harrayed in hostility against each other, and all injurious traces of the recent conflict will have been removed. Very gratifying progress is made toward paying the public debt, and in relieving the industry of the country from the burdens that it must impose. The Indian questions which have hitherto given the Government so much trouble, seem in a fair way of adjustment. The finances of the public revenues of the country have been greatly improved, and greater economy and integrity secured for this branch of the public service. The War and Navy Departments, in spite of clamor against the men placed at their heads, have never been administered with greater vigor or success. And in every department of the Government, there is a very decided improvement in the mode of carrying on its affairs.

Persons who have been disappointed in getting office, and politicians who have failed in securing for themselves as much of influence in the distribution of office as they think they ought to have, are, of course, under the first impulse of their chagrin, disposed to pronounce the Administration a failure. But the sharpness of their disappointment will soon wear away, and their temper, like that of the country at large, will grow less impatient and more just. General GRANT has by no means yet lost that wonderful public confidence which brought him into office, though it is doubtless true, as it is not strange, that in the difficulties and embarrassments of a new Administration, it should have become somewhat impaired. And now, that his initial troubles have been surrounded, we believe it will be strengthened very greatly and very steadily from this time forward.

Relieving Broadway.

It has been suggested that the proposition we made to forthwith clear out all sidewalk obstructions on Broadway, and other leading thoroughfares, from highest obstruction to lowest, from most respectable to least respectable, would do injustice to the abutting property-owners and storekeepers. We cannot see how; it might give them temporary inconvenience, but this would soon be remedied to their own great advantage, and that of everybody else; it would take away some privileges of ingress and egress and some facilities of exposing wares, but these are privileges and facilities which they assumed subject to recall when public convenience demanded.

Indeed, the difficulty has been that where an inch is given an ell is taken in such matters. Where one tradesman or real estate owner seeks to use part of the sidewalk mainly for his personal interest, his rival seizes still more of it. Hence, not only is it the true remedy to repossess the whole for the sole and exclusive use of the public, to whom it belongs, but this is the true way also of satisfying the storekeepers themselves, since all will then be again on an equality. Property-owners can then make such arrangements for entrance and exit, and for show-windows, as will not be neutralized by neighboring obstructions, and so they will start fair again.

For that matter, the alleged "injustice" in so obvious a civic improvement would be not worth mentioning, compared with the radical plan which Mayor HALL declares necessary to accomplish the same object. His scheme is to convert all the lower stories of the stores into sidewalks, which would not only involve considerable expense to the City, but a loss of trade to the storekeepers while such repairs were effected. To this project a property-owner objected in our yesterday's issue, declaring that its cost from Bowling-Green to the City Hall Park alone would be $15,000,000, which we think an absurd overestimate; that the first floors in that region "where trade now counts her millions of exchanges, would be reduced to pawn and junk-shops, or other unimportant callings," which is simply absurd. Our property-owners concede that there must be some relief for Broadway; and unless they are willing to run the risk of what our correspondent calls "a wild scheme of extravagance—a crazy dream of spoliation," they must suggest some other feasible plan, which will accomplish the same end.

Possibly, a proper combination of schemes—parallel thoroughfares, underground railroads, elevated railroads, and so on—might avoid the necessity of a more radical relief on the surface of Broadway. Meanwhile, as we have said, it is for the interest of property-owners, as well as all others, to keep the sidewalks free from obstructions, and so divert the morning and evening throng of pedestrians from complaint. Perhaps it might turn out that this suggestion of ours for temporary relief of Broadway sidewalks, by repossessing the space the public has a right to, might obviate the need of taking their first floors from the property-owners and storekeepers.

When Broadway was so "broad" in proportion to its travel that it received its distinctive name, projections from the houses were possibly accounted a relief to the eye, in such a wilderness of space—just as it is quite a pleasure to find a military parade filling up the emptiness of some of the over-broad avenues of Washington. Now, however, both the beauty and the comfort of the street lie in the uniform cutting off of these excrescences, and the leveling of exterior stoops. The double space thus gained to pedestrians would surely go far toward "affording 200,000 people an easy and rapid access to their homes;" and perhaps, in some regions, even the street could be widened by the gains so made to the sidewalk.

The Great Tory Meetings in England and Ireland.

We hear by cable of enormous popular demonstrations against the disestablishment of the Irish Church, both in Ireland and England, and of petitions on a gigantic scale to the House of Lords urging their Lordships to throw out the bill on the motion for the second reading, which comes on this evening. At Belfast, the centre of Ulster Orange Protestantism, it is asserted that eighty thousand persons were present; at Liverpool fifty thousand, and at Manchester the astounding number of two hundred thousand are said to have attended an anti-disestablishment open-air meeting. All these figures are probably exaggerated, consciously or unconsciously, by those who organized the meetings and drew up the reports of the proceedings—the supposition that nearly one-half of the entire population of Manchester was present being simply preposterous. But there can be no doubt as to the magnitude and political importance of the demonstration in question. There can be no doubt, either, that the Tories throughout the country, who seemed to be thoroughly demoralized after the general election, have recovered their courage to a degree of stubborn resistance, and are not without hope of inducing the House to undo the work of an entire session, and provoke dangerous conflict with the House of Commons. All the Protestant bigotry of the North of Ireland has been aroused, and though naturally intense enough in itself, has been assiduously fanned into violence by political agitation; and it is even said that a large section of the more fanatical Orangemen have been worked up to a pitch of religious fury at which they threaten to abandon their allegiance to England, and to move for the repeal of the Union, should the mainstay of their religious supremacy be done away with. In Lancashire, too, where for various local reasons a strong Conservative reaction has taken place during the past year, the Tories have been flushed with their local victory, and by working on the jealousy that exists between the English population and the numbers of immigrant Irish, have succeeded in organizing large and enthusiastic demonstrations against the Government bill.

It is noticeable, however, that all the renewed opposition to Irish disestablishment emanates from the two sections of country we have mentioned, and is manifestly inspired by the religious and local prejudices to which we have referred. We do not hear of anything similar in London, or in the great cities of England out of Lancashire, or in Scotland. It is true that there exists among the mass of English Liberals a genuine feeling of disappointment that neither the relief from an injustice promised by the bill itself, nor the temper in which Irish questions have recently been treated by the House of Commons, has resulted in materially appeasing Irish discontent. But there are no signs of any general inclination on the part of the Liberals to shrink from consummating their work on that account, and the ultra Tories in the Lords will be very foolish if they take the demonstrations in Ulster and Lancashire as evidences of a change in public opinion sufficient to warrant them in running counter to the emphatically expressed will of the people.

The Printers and the Associated Press.

The National Typographical Union, which has been in session for a week past, has finally adjourned, doing very little business relating to the objects for which it is supposed to exist, and trying to do a good deal on subjects with which it has not the slightest shadow of concern. Among these latter the Associated Press came in for a large share of its attention. Assuming that the Association adds to the expense, and, therefore, to the difficulty, of starting new journals, the Union calls for the abolition of this "tyrannical institution," this "gigantic monopoly," in order that more newspapers may be started, and thus a demand for more printers be created.

The Associated Press is no more an "institution" of any sort than is a single newspaper; it is a voluntary association of several journals, for the purpose of obtaining news by telegraph, for the common use and at the common expense,—the object being to avoid duplicating, at an enormous expense, news which all must have. It originated about twenty years ago, and has grown to its present magnitude and importance through the personal efforts of those in active charge of it, and at the expense of its several members. For several years the labor of waiting for news, and making manifold copies of it for the several papers, was performed in person by Mr. ANDREWS, of the Courier & Enquirer, Mr. HUDSON, of the Herald, and the writer of this paragraph; and it was not till it had been in operation several years that the Association felt strong enough to have all this done at a separate office and by agents and clerks. Membership of it soon came to be valuable, as no newspaper could do without the news, and few new journals were started with sufficient capital to incur the expense of collecting the news for themselves. The Association never assumed to exclude any responsible paper from sharing its advantages; but in view of the immense labor and expense incurred in building it up, it has been thought just and proper to demand a price for such a privilege, corresponding to its value and its cost to the members of the Association. No journal strong enough to go alone objects to this demand; it is only those which desire to reap the profit of publishing a newspaper without incurring the expense of it, that object.

The Typographical Union objects to thus increasing the price of publishing a newspaper, because it keeps printers out of work. This is quite in keeping with the general policy of the Union to secure for printers as much money for as little work as possible; but the hostility of a combination which assumes to fix the prices for which printers may work, and to regulate their hours and degrade and brand all who will not obey their dictation, and which seeks legislative interference to sustain their absurd assumptions, to the "monopoly" and tyranny of the Associated Press, is simply ridiculous. They might just as well demand that every person who desires to start a new newspaper shall have the right to use the correspondence, the editorial force, the law, market and general reports, and, generally, whatever in an old established journal he might find useful to his enterprise. This would greatly facilitate the starting of fresh newspapers, and so increase the demand for printers, and would be quite as just as the Union's demand concerning the Associated Press.

In spite of bitterly opposition the Associated Press increases in favor with the newspapers of the country year by year, and in spite of bitter and determined rivalry it meets with more universal support. Contracts have just been concluded for continued service with the Press of New-England and New-York State. The Press of the Middle and South and South-western States are in alliance with it, and with the whole Western Press the sole difference is in process of adjustment.

As contrary to their general scheme of making it more easy to start newspapers for the benefit of printers, the Union demands that the Government shall enter into the business of telegraphing on its own account, the thinking reader is lazily reckoning at what to say. It is for Congress to judge of the reasonableness of the argument in favor of the plan proposed.

MINOR TOPICS.

It is quite evident that not all those who voted against NAPOLEON at the late elections are yet ready to fight against him at the barricades. The majority in Paris against the Empire was overwhelming; but only a very small number have shown their willingness to carry the battle beyond the ballot at this time. Though the most implacable enemies of the Emperor were chosen in Paris, they have refrained from taking any part in the demonstrations tending to revolution. NAPOLEON was prepared, in case of an outbreak, to make a large reduction in the number of his enemies. Rather than permit himself to be driven from power, he would have razed the Paris he has built.

We don't see that the Republicans require any new party measures until they are able to realize those on which General GRANT was elected. It is true that these measures are not so exciting as the cry of "War," or the cry of "Blood," but their practical application would be of vastly more advantage to the country than it would receive from the waging of ten successful wars.

It is to be hoped that that excellent and learned man, Mr. GOLDWIN SMITH, who is also the friend of America, will hereafter refrain from delivering political speeches. His object in coming to this country was of the noblest kind,—to forward the interests of education, and contribute toward the building up of a young institution of learning. His generous services in this direction are worthy of all praise. But his labors in the way of political speech-making have only resulted in injury, and he will do no good by continuing them.

The Philadelphia Telegraph of Saturday last, in showing what a frightful City this is, says that "there have been no less than seventy-five mysterious disappearances in New-York during the past two weeks." Where did the Philadelphia paper get this news?

General CLUSERET has at last got himself into notoriety in France by being expelled from the country. We had the General over here for a number of years. He was one of the adventurers who, after our war broke out, gathered around General FREMONT, and undertook to show him how to carry on war upon the high strategic principles of the great European Generals. He flourished at this work for a while, but when FREMONT fell, he, too, fell. When GRANT's star was in the ascendant, General CLUSERET was very much disgusted with GRANT's strategy; and having come to this City he started a newspaper, which showed how General GRANT was always wrong and was always beaten, and also showed that there was no chance of his winning unless he adopted CLUSERET's great plan, which he always put forth in abominable English. When peace came and GRANT succeeded, CLUSERET was disgusted with the country, and went back to France. There he has been making himself busy in meddling with everything, just as he did here; and it is well for the Liberal side that the Emperor has caused him to be ordered out of the country. We don't suppose there is any danger of his coming back here, to live with a nation which has made GRANT President.

The Bostonians have now the opportunity to set the country an example which will do them great credit as a matter of taste and manners. When three hundred gentlemen were introduced to the President one day last week in Washington, they all insisted on "shaking hands" with him, and when the affair was over he found himself shaken into utter exhaustion. He has just had the same sort of experience at West Point; and in fact, whether he stays at home or goes abroad, everybody who can get into his presence insists on "shaking hands" with him. Now the Bostonians have an opportunity of showing their better breeding, and their higher regard for the President when he arrives in that place on Wednesday. Let them repress the almost irrepressible desire which they doubtless all feel for shaking hands with their guest; and if they do, we venture to say that GRANT will show his appreciation of their consideration and courtesy by often visiting their city.

Mr. WILLIAM SWINTON's letter from Omaha will be found readable with interest. His remarks on the way in which the Pacific Railroad has been built, and its present condition, are deserving of attention. He shows that while it was a necessity that the work should be hastened to completion, its imperfections are now in rapid process of correction, and that it will be equipped as a first-class road and run as a first-class road, the managers being convinced that it will be to their own profit to put it in the best condition. It seems that the travel on the road is already very large, and that its business in "commercial freight" is beyond expectation. The most important incident referred to is the discovery on the line of the road of enormous coal beds, which are already being worked. This is a vital fact to the trans-Mississippi region, and will aid in the explanation of Mr. SWINTON's energetic ideas regarding the settlement and development of the country bordering on the Pacific Railroad.

We suppose it will be considered encouraging news that during the last three months our troops in Arizona have killed forty Indian warriors, taken their families captive, and destroyed "immense quantities of stock, supplies, &c." Doubtless, however, we will have to pay something between $50,000 and $100,000 for the killing of each of these Arizona savages—that is to say, our expenses for conveying troops to that wretched region, and maintaining them there during the year, will cost us several million dollars. If it be a good thing to kill warriors in Arizona, we certainly have to pay well for it. And what do we receive in return?

The work of the Quakers with the Indians will be greatly simplified, if the Government rigidly enforces the order which has just been sanctioned, with the agreement of the Departments concerned. All the Indians of the Plains are to be restricted to the reservations set apart for them; and those who may go outside of these are to be dealt with by the military authorities. The Quakers will, therefore, only have to look after those within the reserves, and will have a good opportunity of introducing among them the arts of peace and civilization.

Mr. DAVID GREENBECK, the Police Commissioners' clerk, and not the Wall-street capitalist of the same name, bobs his suit against Trinity Church Corporation partly on the ground that Dr. MORGAN L. DIX has preached that "any form of Catechism is better than the private judgment of the Protestant who effected the Reformation." We recommend Mr. GREENBECK to transfer his attendance from Old Trinity to the new church of the Holy Spirit, in Seventy-second-street, in the morning of which, on yesterday morning, Bishop FORBES preached on the infallibility of the Prayer-book of the Episcopal Church, and declared that "for his part he would consider it more likely that all the people of this or any other one generation were mistaken than that any passage of the Prayer-book should be in error."

It was given out last week that Governor CURTIN, of Pennsylvania, would, in his Philadelphia speech of Saturday, develop the new party policy of "War and Bankruptcy." He uttered not a word on the subject, however. What little he said on the foreign relations of the country was in an entirely different direction. He said that he himself, while armed, would labor for the maintenance of peace, and then he added:

"It is a subject of congratulation that our country is restored to peace, and that the war is over; and I do sincerely hope that it will please Providence to answer the earnest prayer of our President to 'let us have peace.' When I return to you I hope I may find this a country of homogeneous people, with all the bitterness of angry feeling which caused the war and all its vindictive kindred, not that we may be in the enjoyment of that fraternal feeling which alone can make a nation great and respected, and a people happy and prosperous."

It is evident that Governor CURTIN has been misrepresented, as there is no doubt other prominent Republicans have been, in regard to his willingness to plunge the country into another war, or at least to get up a war-shriek, as a means of party success.

There is a great deal of apprehension in Spain concerning General PRIM, who, it is found, will attempt to play the same rôle in Spain that the present Emperor NAPOLEON played in France seventeen years ago. In other words it is supposed he is plotting to bring about a favorable opportunity for seizing the reins of power, by a coup d' état. He has been watched with suspicion ever since the outbreak of the revolution; and if the Spaniards continue to watch him as closely hereafter ("eternal vigilance is the price of liberty,") there will be no possibility of his getting the chance to carry out the scheme attributed to him.

Curious stories are occasionally started and systematically circulated for the purpose of injuring the political prospects of individuals. They are also originated sometimes to affect the business interests of more prominent men. Mr. A. T. STEWART, of this City, appears to be a favorite object of such shafts. One of the most effective arguments used by the high-tariffites to damage his chances as Secretary of the Treasury was the fact that he had, in the natural course of his immense business, numerous pending claims for "drawbacks" or overpaid custom duties. Some years ago systematic misrepresentations were made of his social relations. There has now been started a story of his conversion to Catholicism, told in such style as indicates that it has at least a two-fold purpose.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

With the withdrawal of Mr. EDWIN BOOTH from active duty at his superb theatre, the close of the Grand Opera House and the surrender of Wallack's to the inanities of English pantomime, the regular dramatic season may be said to have terminated. All things considered, its close is by no means a matter of regret. The three above-named establishments apparently endeavored to preserve their respectability and dignity unimpaired to the end; but the events of many months past at most of the other houses have been of so unworthy a character, and so injurious to every dramatic interest in which the better part of the public is concerned, that if the theatrical operations of the year could now be everywhere suspended in fact, as, according to a conventional fiction, they are in name, we should have hearty reason to congratulate managers, actors, and the community alike. This, however, is an irregular and irresponsible period, when our leading theatres claim the right to launch forth enterprises of any degree of folly or feebleness, without being held to strict account for their actions. Without recognizing such rights, as a general rule, we are willing enough, just now, to see them exercised to the freest, the wildest and the most irrational extent, in the hope that even the grossest appetites of the populace may become satiated with excess, and that those who have in charge the provision of public amusements may be speedily awakened to the necessity of a radical change in the disposition of their affairs for the coming year. The blight of burlesque and pantomime, although now resting prettily heavily upon us, has not, in the estimation of many managers, run its complete course. If this be really so, let us by all means have the whole of it at once, and look to the earliest possible future for a respite from its ravages. We believe there is no indisposition to encourage it at any establishment in town, excepting Mr. BOOTH's. He, with an obstinacy which, we are told, excites the derision of his colleagues, prefers rather to attain prosperity by measured and judicious steps than to rush madly from his legitimate sphere in pursuit of brief and casual successes which, however shining for the moment, would inevitably cast a dangerous shadow over his subsequent prospects, and imperil the credit of his career. But no considerations of this sort can interfere with the spread and sweep of burlesque in other directions. That active theatrical pioneer, Mr. HENDERSON, may stretch out his tentacles wherever he chooses, and fasten himself, with his companions, upon every play-house we possess, excepting Mr. BOOTH's, without objection or opposition on the part of proprietors. And so, if we must suffer the infliction yet a while, our first wish is that at whatever cost of immediate discomfort, it may be so arranged that the agony shall all be over before another regular season opens upon us. Exhaust the field, gentlemen, as expeditiously as you can. When that is done, we will help you to fertilize it anew, and on a healthier system.

That performances of a light and volatile class should be introduced in fair proportion among the entertainments of a large city is naturally and properly to be expected. Against burlesques and pantomimes, as we sometimes see them, and as we hope to see them again, there is not a reasonable word to be said. Some of our best artists, indeed, have frequently devoted their talents to extravagance, with results which would make us seriously reject the total exclusion of such illustrations from the stage. Mr. JEFFERSON's burlesque, for example, exhibits as close a study of nature and as keen an appreciation of artistic principles as his most exquisite pictures of refined wit of finder pathos. Mr. FOX's pantomime, though not always free from buffoonery, is pervaded by a rich and genuine humor which justifies it in holding a permanent place in the regard of the community. And these gentlemen, among Americans, are not alone. It is the English style of stage burlesque that we oppose as destructive to popular taste, and mischievous in its influence upon the entire drama of the country. What is English burlesque? What attribute of merit has it displayed? Who are its representatives here? To speak of its literary qualities would be like repeating the famous chapter upon snakes in Iceland. Cheap rhymes, pro-Adamite puns, impudent distortion of grave political and social subjects are the conspicuous characteristics of its text. Uncouth and impudent imitations of negro dances by young women, and coarse reproductions of the London concert saloon ditties are the only relieffs to the dreary dullness. These, and absolutely nothing more, constitute British burlesque. And what are we to say of the instrumentality by means of which this debris is forced upon us? Nothing, excepting that, low as the condition of the English stage now is in every respect, the deepest depths seem to have been sounded to produce the combinations of stupidity and incompetency which have been let loose upon these shores. Let us take a few examples, at random. Miss LYDIA THOMPSON, even in her prime, fifteen years ago, at the St. James' Theatre, was at best a pretty imitation—only, in those days she chose better subjects for imitation than negro minstrels and French lorettes. She remains at this day, artistically speaking, precisely what she was in 1854. Miss MARKHAM, after a vain attempt a year or so ago to fulfill the simplest dramatic tasks of the Queen's Theatre, dropped into the groove of broad burlesque, from which she has never since emerged. Miss HOEY, during her three or four years' experience, has never undertaken anything else. Miss WILMOTS is unknown outside of this single department of her profession. It is needless to extend the list. They are all alike, and if, by any chance they could once be united in the representation of a genuine drama, requiring some degree of intelligence and culture, our audiences would very soon discover upon what insecure pegs their homage has of late been hung. The fact is, that neither the supposed abilities of these young women, nor the pretended merit of the entertainment in which they appear, is the cause of their attractiveness. The spirit in which they are welcomed and applauded is precisely that which impels a certain class to seek their literary recreation in weekly pictorial publications which we do not care to name. Visitors to the Louvre have sometimes observed that while the finer collections of that noble gallery were passed by with comparative indifference, the Rubens' corridors would be thronged with eager gazers, hired and encouraged not by the vigor and brilliancy of the paintings, but by their bold disclosures of brawny nakedness. In like manner, the mere chaste examples of ancient and modern sculpture in London are disregarded by prurient multitudes who flock in ecstacy around the yellow hair and rosy flesh tints of Mr. GIBSON's Venus, tempering their adoration only with regrets that the already robust proportions of the goddess cannot be artificially amplified. Such are the sentiments which have thus far inspired the recognition of our burlesques and ballet visitors. It is fortunate that only a section of the community is animated by them, and that even their curiosity must in course of time be satisfied. Meanwhile, as we have again and again pointed out, the managers, while yielding to this ignoble popular impulse, are handing over the native profession to ruin, and preparing the way for their own utter discomfiture when the reaction comes.

It is mortifying to find, on looking over the record of the last eight or ten months, with what readiness the theatres have been given up to the inroads of this new "sensation." It first set in at WOOD's, early in October, and has continued there almost without interruption up to the present time. In December it spread to Niblo's, where it is still dominant. Two little theatres, the Conique and the Waverley have since prolied upon it almost exclusively. It has also occupied the most prominent place among the varied exhibitions of Tammany. And now, by a coincidence which few could ever have foreseen, it is adopted at the same moment by Wallack's Theatre and the Bowery. Nothing that we can see now prevents it from swamping every place of entertainment, except Booth's, that the City contains. As we have said, the one consoling reflection is, that it may all be over the sooner. If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well it were done quickly.

Musical.

FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

Mlle. DESCLAUZAS has replaced M. AUJAC at this theatre in the character of Pequilla, the love-stricken hero of "La Périchole." It is needless to say that the change is not and cannot be an improvement. The manly bearing, the vivacious acting, and the clear, resonant voice of the favorite tenor were among the most important accessories to the effect of this opera, and although Mlle. DESCLAUZAS sings with much skill, and contributes a great deal of spirit to the action, her performance appears feeble by contrast. Her personal appearance, moreover, is hardly calculated to preserve an illusion which every note she utters tends to overthrow. Her excellent qualities as a musician, however, are agreeably displayed, and in other respects her impersonation will enjoy a "success of curiosity," if nothing more. "La Périchole" will be repeated every night this week, with which the season of opera bouffe closes.

THE SEYMOUR MEMORIAL CONCERTS.

We are happy to state that the success of these entertainments was complete and perfect in every way that could have been desired. Steinway Hall was filled on Saturday afternoon and evening with audiences which ranked in numbers among the largest of the season, and in appreciation and good-will among the most enthusiastic. The performances of the remarkable congregation of artists were listened to with the interest and applauded with the cordiality which they deserved. A worthier testimony to the memory of the late Mr. SEYMOUR, both on the part of the ladies and gentlemen who volunteered their assistance and of the musical public, could not have been afforded.

MADRIGAL CONCERT.

The Madrigal Concert, recently given with so much success, is to be repeated at Steinway Hall this evening.

The Validity of Obligations for Slaves—An Important Decision.

From the New Orleans Bee, June 8.

It is well known that the Supreme Court of Louisiana, in an elaborately-reasoned judgment, more than a year ago decreed that obligations founded upon property in slaves were invalid in consequence of the abolition of the institution of slavery by the Government of the United States. The Court, therefore, refused to enforce the payment of such obligations. They asserted in their decree that slavery had never existed by law in the United States, but that it had been tolerated only.

Judge DURELL, of the United States Court in this State, thinks differently, and we do not see how any lawyer could come to the conclusion that a contract, lawful when entered into, could possibly become unlawful by any subsequent act of the Government. Judge DURELL decided last week in favor of the plaintiff in the case of WALTER L. CAMPBELL, ex. L. F. GENERES, where in the defendant was sued as indorser on a promissory note, the consideration of which was for the purchase of slaves. The defendant pleaded the destruction of the property by act of the Government. The sum claimed was $6,360, with 8 per cent. interest from April 4, 1860, until paid.

Political Disabilities in Virginia.

A Virginian, who was pardoned by President JOHNSON, in September, 1868, and voted at the election held in his State on the 7th of October following, has recently been refused the right to register. He wrote to Gen. CAREY, urging his right to vote, on the ground that his political disabilities were removed long before the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, and before the enactment of the reconstruction acts of Congress. He has received the following reply:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MILITARY DISTRICT,
STATE OF VIRGINIA,
RICHMOND, VA., June 8, 1869.

Mr. P. P. Brandeburg, Staunton, Va.:

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that you have received a pardon from the President of the United States for participating in the late rebellion, and inquiring if you have the right to register and vote, I am instructed by the Commanding General to say that Executive pardon does not remove political disabilities.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LOUIS V. CAZIARC, A. D. C., A. A. A. G.

Pursuit of Knowledge in a Saw-Mill.

From the Floyd County (Iowa) Gazette.

Last Monday, a German called at GOODHUE, ANDREWS & Co.'s saw-mill, to gain a wonder at the various and complicated machinery. Among other things that he saw, was a small circular saw, sawing faster than anything he ever saw saw before. Its rapid motion fascinated him; he reached out his right index finger toward its ill-defined periphery, (for the circumference of a saw in swift motion looks to be at the base of the teeth, and not at their points,) when to his surprise, the end of his finger disappeared in an instant, and rolled away to the other side of the saw. The man tied up the stump in his handkerchief; whereupon Mr. ANDREWS, noting him, came up and inquired what was the matter. The victim of misplaced confidence replied: "Mickel ANDREWS, I never come to see your mills before. I need die finger gotting around so fast I takes m

A Party of Fillibusters Surprised and Dispersed with Loss.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Reported Action of Mr. Motley upon the Alabama Difficulty.

LONDON, Sunday, June 13.

A Cabinet meeting was held yesterday. It is rumored, though the report cannot be authenticated, that an official communication from Mr. MOTLEY was presented by Lord CLARENDON. The report states that in his communication Mr. MOTLEY informs Her Majesty's Government of the rejection by the United States Senate of the Alabama Claims Treaty. He represents that the grounds for rejection were the insufficiency of the treaty as a full settlement of the questions in dispute between the two countries; he intimates that the present Administration concurs in the reasons which led the Senate to decline to ratify the treaty, and says that he is instructed to express the earnest desire of the American Government for a speedy and friendly renewal of the matters in difference by a treaty which will do justice to all parties, leaving no question open for future misunderstanding or complications. He announces his readiness to receive and consider with liberality any proposition Her Majesty's Government may make for a full settlement of the important international questions at issue, as well as of the claims of individual citizens growing out of the action of either Government during the late war of rebellion.

Opposition to Disestablishment—Immense Tory Meetings.

LONDON, Saturday, June 12—Evening.

Immense Tory demonstrations have been held to-day in various parts of the Kingdom. At Manchester over 200,000 persons were present. Resolutions protesting against the passage of the Irish Church bill were passed, and a monster petition embodying the substance of the resolutions was sent to Earl DERBY for presentation to the House of Lords. At Liverpool there were fifty thousand people present. Speeches were made by distinguished persons, and the usual resolutions against the disestablishment of the Irish Church were unanimously adopted.

The Laying of the French Cable.

LONDON, Sunday, June 13.

The expedition for the laying of the French cable has commenced its work. Captain SHERARD OSBORN telegraphs from Deal to-day that the steamer Great Eastern has cleared all the dangers of navigation at the mouth of the Thames, steaming out into the Channel admirably, and will arrive at Portland Monday. Her tender, the Chiltern, preceded her.

SPAIN.

Popular Obedience to the Constitution—Prim Vindicates the Mexicans—The Candidacy of Montpensier.

MADRID, Sunday, June 13.

The army and navy, and the civil magistrates throughout the Kingdom are taking the oath to respect and obey the new Constitution.

During the debate on Mexico in the Cortes, yesterday, a Deputy stigmatized the Mexicans as cowards. General PRIM replied that a people who were able to sustain themselves against invasion were not cowards. He eulogized the Mexican Republic, and called President JUAREZ the "great Republican." This was received with loud cheering.

In the Cortes yesterday NAVARRE advocated the election of the Duke of MONTPENSIER to the throne, and declared his preference for immediate and final action on the part of the Cortes to that effect.

Marshal PRIM defended the present Government of Mexico, and announced that diplomatic relations would soon be renewed with President JUAREZ.

The Duke of MONTPENSIER has entered Spain, and is now in Andalusia.

Reports of Heavy Fighting Confirmed—Fillibustering Party Surprised and Defeated with Great Loss.

HAVANA, Sunday, June 13.

The reports of a heavy engagement at Puerto Padre are confirmed. The Spaniards admit a loss of sixty killed, and estimate that of the Cubans at 1,200 killed and wounded. The insurgent General MARMOR was killed in the battle.

The following news has been received from Santiago de Cuba, and comes from Spanish sources:

"A schooner recently landed a party of one hundred filibusters at Port Rattiguri, sixty miles east of Santiago. The party was betrayed by its guide, who gave information of their landing to the officer in command at Baracoa. The troops of the garrison surprised and cut them up with the filibusters attacked them. In the fight fifty of the latter were killed, and the rest were taken prisoners. The leader of the party was shot on the spot, and the prisoners were taken to Santiago for execution. All the stores of the expedition were captured, including $6,000,000 in unsigned revolutionary currency, several hundred rifles, and three or four pieces of artillery."

The Hoffman and Moorehead Lake Railroad.

BANGOR, Me., Sunday, June 13.

At a meeting of stockholders of the Hoffman and Moorehead Lake Railroad, held yesterday, a subject of the contract for a loan of the said road to the Hoffman and Moorehead Company was considered and rejected. Subsequently the stockholders unofficially made a proposition to lease their road to the Maine Central Company for a term of fifty years.

GOVERNOR CURTIN.

Additional Incidents of the Complimentary Banquet—Speech of Count Modinos—Congratulatory Dispatch of the Czar.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, June 13.

At the dinner to Governor CURTIN, in Philadelphia, Saturday, the toast of Russia was responded to by Count MODINOS, Charge d'Affaires of the Russian Government at Washington, who said:

You have selected one of your leading countrymen to represent you in my native country. I can assure him and can assure you that when he arrives in that country he will meet with friends; for Russians are all friends of the American people. Your new Minister, Mr. CURTIN, is remembered in Russia for the courage and determination he displayed while Governor of the Keystone State during the great struggle that shook your nation. The sentiments of Russia were, during that struggle and are now in favor of Establishment of the Federal Union and of her peace and prosperity. That you may fully understand the feelings of the Czar of that country in this respect, I have received a dispatch forwarded to Count GORTSCHAKOFF for the Emperor to me, and which I intended to the proper authorities.

The dispatch reads as follows:

To Count Modinos, Charge d'Affaires:

SIR: The sympathies of our present covenant to want the American people and for their destinies are no active and are sincere to Permit His Majesty has made again to express a desire to congratulate on the present of General GRANT to the Presidency of the Federal Union. By order of the Emperor you are instructed to express the interpreter of these sentiments near the President. The services which General GRANT has rendered to his country under such circumstances warrant sanguine augories of the future, and of the good work to which he had the glory to contribute in a manner so efficient. This work of pacification and of national prosperity has not met with, and will not anywhere meet with more cordial and more sincere sympathy than in Russia.

ALEXANDER, Czar of Russia.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that, although the climate of Russia is cold, her houses are forever warm for Americans. [Great applause.]

Further Honors to the New Minister.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, June 13.

The Board of Directors of the Union League will give a dinner to Governor CURTIN and suite on Monday afternoon at the League House. The Joint Committee of the City Councils on the Reception of CURTIN have procured a special car from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and with Mayor FOX will accompany CURTIN to New-York on Wednesday. He sails for Europe on Thursday, when they propose to accompany him down New-York Bay.

A Train of Government Stores Captured by Arizona Indians—Additional Outrages.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Saturday, June 12.

Late Arizona advices received here are to the effect that about three hundred Indians attacked a train of nine wagons and eighty mules, laden with Government stores for Camp Grant. After a resistance of ten hours the teamsters were joined by a small force of soldiers; but the Indians compelled them to abandon the train, with the loss of three men killed and three wounded. The loss of the Indians was not known. Soon after capturing the train the savages set fire to the wagons and destroyed them, together with their contents. The property was valued at about $40,000. Upon the receipt of the news at Tucson, troops were sent in pursuit of the Indians, but the search was fruitless.

A large party of savages had made a descent upon a herd of two hundred cattle belonging to a Frenchman named LA SEED, and driven them off, capturing the entire lot.

Only a sufficient number of troops remained at Camp Goswell to garrison the post, and no immediate pursuit could be made. Unless greater military protection is soon afforded the settlers the country will be abandoned to the Indians.

News from Alaska—Seizure of Furs from Sitka in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, June 12.

The steamship Constantine arrived from Sitka to-day. She brings about $12,000 worth of skins of fur-bearing animals from Alaska. Owing to some infraction of the Treasury regulations, the Government officers seized the steamer's cargo of furs.

Everything is unusually dull at Sitka. The weather is warm throughout the territory. But little ice was put up either at Kadiak Island or Sitka by the ice companies.

Proposed Orphan Asylum for Oakland, California—Speech at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, June 12.

HORACE W. CARPENTER, of Oakland, offers to donate $60,000 for the establishment of an Orphan Asylum in that city, on condition that five other citizens subscribe like amounts, making a total of $360,000, or even if all the citizens of Oakland will make up the above amount.

The United States steamer Pensacola brings $600,000 in treasure from Mexican ports.

Preliminaries of the Peace Jubilee.

BOSTON, Sunday, June 13.

The near approach of the great National Peace Jubilee is marked by an immense influx of strangers at the hotels, lodging houses, in the streets and filling the churches to-day. Many thousands thronged around the closed doors of the Coliseum, viewing its immense proportions with evident pleasure and astonishment. Several musical organizations from a distance have already arrived, one from Chicago, reaching the city by the midnight train last night. All such organizations are promptly escorted to comfortable quarters by the Committee of the Accommodation Bureau. The grand ball to be given in the Coliseum, Thursday night, is attracting much attention. The music will be furnished by DODWORTH's full military band. It promises to be a brilliant affair. Efforts will be made to induce President GRANT to remain over Thursday. The week promises to be an eventful one in the history of the "hub."

Virginia Duellists—Encounter in North Carolina.

RICHMOND, Va., Friday, June 11.

A duel was fought on Saturday afternoon between Captain W. E. CAMERON, editor of the Petersburg Index, (Conservative,) and ROBERT W. HUGHES, a contributor to the Richmond State Journal, (Republican,) in consequence of an article denouncing HUGHES. The fight took place in North Carolina, sixteen miles from the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad, and the weapons used were pistols. CAMERON was struck in the breast at the first fire, the ball striking a rib and glancing. HUGHES demanded another fire, but the surgeons pronounced CAMERON unable to deliver another shot. HUGHES then declared that he was satisfied, and the affair ended. CAMERON's wounds are severe, but not considered dangerous.

The Royal Insurance Bond Robbery Case.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Sunday, June 13.

On Saturday evening the jury in the case the People vs. DANIEL SOMAS, for the Royal Insurance bond robbery in New-York in December, 1866, failed to agree and were discharged. The case has occupied the attention of the Court for five days, and attracted much interest. This was the second trial of the defendant on the same charge. The jury were about equally divided.

Amendment to the New-York State Militia Law.

The New-England Friends in Newport.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, June 13.

The New-England yearly meeting of Friends commenced in Newport yesterday. There was a large attendance.

WASHINGTON.

The Work of the Census Committee—Affairs in Virginia—Cuban Revolutionary Agents at Work—The Tax on Cotton Brokers.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 13.

THE CENSUS COMMITTEE.

The Census Committee who are in session from five to six hours a day, are doing their work very thoroughly, and will probably be engaged here for two weeks or more. One of the most important questions with which they will have to deal will be the effect of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, adopted in 1867, upon the basis of representation, and the relative political power of the States nationally considered. The second section of that amendment reads as follows:

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

The design of this amendment was to exclude from representation all that class of negro population to whom the right of suffrage was denied, but on careful reading it will be seen that it applies not only to this class, but to all other classes who are denied the right to vote, save those disqualified for crime or participation in rebellion. Upon this theory it is held by some that Massachusetts, which denies the voting franchise to all those who cannot read and write; Rhode Island, where foreigners without property qualification are not permitted to vote; and other States who refuse the franchise to limited classes for other or similar causes, must suffer in their basis of representation. It is also apprehended that citizens of the United States who, for any cause, such as change of residence, are not allowed to vote, must, with that portion of the population they represent, be also excluded. It becomes then of considerable importance to ascertain how the requirements of this section of the Constitution referred to can be met. This is but one of the difficult questions which encounter the Census Committee in their investigations.

AFFAIRS IN VIRGINIA.

Among the arrivals in the city are Hon. GILBERT C. WALKER, Conservative candidate for Governor of Virginia, and Mr. GILMAN, editor of the Richmond Whig. These gentlemen have been actively engaged in the political canvass in the Valley of Virginia for the past three weeks, and represent matters as assuming a very lively aspect. They say the white people are becoming aroused to the importance and necessity of the triumph of the Conservative ticket, and that the apathy which has been represented as afflicting a large class of white voters does not exist. The prospect of the adoption of the expurgated constitution and the election are regarded as very hopeful. Mr. WALKER will address a Conservative mass meeting at Lexsburg, to-morrow.

THE CUBAN INSURRECTION.

The agents of the Cuban Revolutionary Junta are making the most persistent efforts to secure a recognition of the insurgents as belligerents by the United States. They have had several interviews with the Secretary of State in reference to it within the last few days, but there is the best authority for the statement that our Government will take no action whatever on the subject, at least for the present. The Cubans have the sympathy of the President and the entire Cabinet, but it is felt that the rebellion is not of the proportions and strength to justify the important concession demanded.

COMPARISON OF TARIFFS.

General F. A. WALKER, Deputy Commissioner of the Revenue, in charge of the Statistical Bureau, yesterday transmitted by request to the Committee of Ways and Means at San Francisco, Cal., a tabular statement in which the duties upon about four thousand articles of importation enumerated in the tariff laws of the United States are compared in detail with those of the following, named countries: Great Britain and Russia, with the Zollverein tariff, and with the tariffs of Switzerland, France and Russia. There are about twenty thousand items in all, and all the rates are reduced to United States currency figures. The whole statement is replete with valuable information on tariff matters, which should be printed and distributed for general information.

THE BUSTED INVESTIGATION.

A private letter from Montgomery, Ala., making allusion to the Busted investigation, says the Committee are very quietly engaged in taking testimony and are keeping their own counsel. The general expectation is that BUSTED will be acquitted.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 13.

THE DISCHARGE OF CLERKS.

An order having been issued by Secretary HAWLINS that sixty clerks only, and other employes of the different Bureaus of the Department, were to be retained out of two hundred and twenty-eight, Adjutant-General TOWNSEND telegraphed to the Secretary concerning it, and he replied that the order should be suspended until he returns to the city.

THE INDIAN DIFFICULTIES.

Should the present military force on the frontier be inadequate to promptly quell the existing difficulties with the Indians, authority will be conferred upon General SCHOFIELD to raise volunteers for this purpose, and secure peace and tranquillity to the border.

AFFAIRS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue has received authority from the War Department to use the United States troops in North Carolina when necessary to carry out the Internal Revenue laws. This grows out of the fact that there is a large number of distilleries in that State, the proprietors of which continue to evade the law and put the revenue officers at defiance.

THE NATIONAL BANKS.

Probably some of the national banks which are retained as financial agents and depositories of public moneys, will increase their securities in proportion to the increase of Government deposits. The Troy City National Bank has already increased its securities $50,000.

BUSINESS OF THE SAMPLE OFFICE.

The Secretary of the Treasury has ruled that the business of the Sample Office must be conducted as intended and provided by the Treasury regulations to the examination of sample packages, which may be sent thither under the supposition that they are of no merchantable value. All packages of merchandise, whether imported by express companies or others, except samples of no marketable value, must be entered at regular entry, and, if not so entered, be treated as merchandise and sold to the highest bidder until the proper entry shall be made thereof. Packing vessels daily thousands of merchandise, which is a part of the United States for a bonded warehouse, subject to the regulations of the Treasury Department, and they have applied for landing town stores, bonded stores, and for the full drawback of duties. Whether the party was unauthorized, in the first place, to land the goods, or whether the entry was unauthorized, is, in fact, a matter of no moment, in the causes where the independence was first displayed, was, of course, most intensively strong. The proceedings of the mass of ignorance and the filled the house, and who were quite entirely and respectable in demeanor, under the heating and extracting of party leaders, were quite amusing. Those who learned their first lesson in caucusing, listening to harangues from either side, voting against their own wishes and purposes oftener than for them, and finally adjourning in general uproar. Before the adjourned meeting they had been instructed in such matters, and nominated their men without regard to party dictation. Some of the minor offices, as road surveyors and constables, are filled by colored men who give measurable satisfaction in performing their duties.

Schools are not yet on any respectable footing. Not more than one-third of the children outside of Beaufort attend school at all, and they so irregularly as to well-nigh waste the labor and expense incurred. The parents take the highest of interest in them, sending their children where books, thread, needles, &c., are furnished gratis, and no charges are made, and having no realizing sense of the importance of schooling. They will learn it slowly at the best, and the soonest when they are taxed for the support of schools and its collection is inforced. It is a constitutional enactment in this State that a poll tax not to exceed one dollar shall be levied on every male 21 years old and upward, to be applied exclusively to schools. This tax has been assessed this year for the first time. What proportion of it will be collected is quite a problem. It is also a constitutional enactment that all children between the ages of 6 and 16 shall be compelled to attend school, either public or private, for a term equivalent to 24 months at least. There has not been time yet for this law to be put in force. Certainly, if negroes do not prove their fitness for citizenship in this State, under such laws, they will prove their unfitness for it. TRAGEDY IN BROOKLYN.

A Negro Shoots a White Man—Arrest of the Homicide by the Police.

Yesterday morning at about 11 o'clock, a white man named FITCH, who formerly resided in Raymond-street, near Willoughby, was shot and almost instantly killed by JOSEPH DRAKE, a negro, near the house of the latter, on the line of Buffalo-avenue and Warren-street. The circumstances of the affair show that FITCH and one JAMES BRADSHAW (also white) proceeded to DRAKE's house at the time above stated, and after calling him out, BRADSHAW assaulted and knocked him down. He then continued the assault and would not permit the negro to rise. While lying on the ground DRAKE was heard to cry, "don't bite," from which it would appear that his assailant was biting him. DRAKE, however, finally succeeded in regaining his feet with the assistance of FITCH and a negro named RICHARD MOORE, (who had attempted to separate the parties,) and called for his pistol, which was brought to him from the house by JOSEPH WILLIAMS, also colored. He discharged the weapon at BRADSHAW, (as supposed,) but the ball took effect in FITCH's right breast, and, passing into his lungs, caused almost instant death. All the parties became terrified at this tragical termination of the affair, and fled from the place, leaving FITCH weltering in his gore.

At about 1 o'clock P. M. the Police of the Forty-ninth Precinct were notified of the tragedy, and Captain LEICH with a number of policemen, visited the scene and instituted a search for the homicide. DRAKE was finally found concealed in the house in the rear of Buffalo-avenue, who took him to the Station-house, corner of Greene-avenue and Broadway. The negro WILLIAMS was also arrested, but the other parties succeeded in making their escape and were at large up to a late hour last night. The body of the murdered FITCH was taken to the Station-house, where Coroner JONES will hold an inquest to-day.

Strawberry Festival.

On Tuesday evening a strawberry festival will be held at the Howard Mission, No. 40 New Bowery, for the benefit of the school, and the public are invited to be present. Besides an abundance of ice-cream, berries and flowers for all who come, there will be some choice music and entertaining speeches.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

Brooklyn.

WILLIAM CALLAHAN, aged 33 years, was arrested by the Forty-fourth Precinct Police on Saturday evening, on the charge of having robbed JOHN MCCORMICK of a sum of money when the latter was asleep in the City Park. He was locked up to answer.

ANDREW HANDRAHAN, JOHN MCQUADE and JOHN BRICE, arrested on Sunday morning by officers of the Forty-fourth Precinct on the charge of having burglariously entered McGOLDRICK's liquor store, corner of Myrtle-avenue and Stanhope-street, and stolen a quantity of liquors and cigars therefrom. The accused were held to answer.

Three boys, JOHN BRICE and JOHN and EDWARD MCCARTY, were severely injured on Saturday evening by the explosion of a keg of powder with which they were loading a small cannon, at the corner of Fifth-avenue and Thirteenth-street. They were removed to their homes.

On Thursday evening next the Sabbath School connected with the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church will hold a strawberry festival at Masonic Temple, corner Grand and Scott-streets, Fifth Ward District. A choice entertainment is promised.

New-Jersey.

About 11 o'clock yesterday morning, while a drove of Texan cattle were on their way to the slaughter-house at Communipaw, one of the number got on the rampage and rushed about wildly. A man named JAMES FORSTER, connected with the Jersey City and Bergen horse-railroad, attempted to drive the infuriated beast from his garden in Church-street, Bergen, and was terribly gored in the lower part of the abdomen, inflicting a dangerous wound. Drs. WILKINSON and CRAWEN attended the man, but fear there is no hope of his recovery. A man named JOHN BRENNAN was also gored and badly wounded in the arm. Mr. WILLAHAN, a mason, shot the ox and thus prevented him from doing any further injury.

There were eight arrests for drunkenness effected on Saturday night in Jersey City, among others, that of WILLIAM MCDONNELL, a recent importation from Scotland, who was found at 12:30 o'clock, lying very drunk. The officers advised him to get his life insured as in ten minutes more he would have had his head cut off by a train. He replied that he was already insured, and if he had been killed his sweetheart would have got $500.

HENRY PIERSON and WILLIAM KING were arrested in Newark, yesterday, on a charge of having broken and entered the house of WALLIS WARD, Market-street, and stolen therefrom a quantity of cigars and about $20 in money. The men are supposed to have entered the house early in the morning, and decamped with all they could find. PIERSON was wanted on a former charge, and his arrest yesterday led to his implication in the present burglary. The stolen property was found with them. The arrest was effected by Detective MILLER.

NED MACKEY, the great New-Jersey cock-fighter, was arrested for being dead drunk, and was kept as a guest of the city until sober.

Yesterday was an annual day in Jersey City, owing to an order given by Chief FOWLER to the liquor dealers on Saturday night, notifying them that they must keep closed on Sunday.

Mr. JOSHUA BROWN, of Westfield, on Saturday picked a straw berry in his garden which measured 6¾ inches in circumference. He thinks it would be hard to beat this.

THE NEGROES IN THE SOUTH.

Their Present Condition and Prospects—Effects of Owning Property—Efforts to Elevate and Educate Them.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

BEAUFORT, S. C., Saturday, June 5, 1869.

I can imagine that a great deal of interest must be taken by all classes of the North, though, perhaps, for different reasons, in all that pertains to negro culture and development in the South-ern States, and especially in this State, and on the Sea Islands where the interest form of slavery is supposed to have existed, and where its results reached their fullest development. Since then the negro has per force been made a citizen of a free commonwealth, and clothed with all its exalted franchises, although but just released from a debasing slavery. Every thoughtful person must be intent upon his department, and what are the prospects to the State thereupon resulting. There is reason for affirming that there are elements slowly and surely at work, looking to a redistribution of property and labor, in which these people will own land and perform labor in accordance with natural fitness and acquirements. The great majority are sure to be remanded to the position of simple day laborers. And in this direction the first step has already been taken, viz., the people leaving their families and lands and going abroad to find labor, in order to "get vittel to go upon," and to this, year after year, there is scarcely an exception.

But this argues nothing for or against the negroes per se, it being a natural result, inevitable to their condition. Having been called to official duties in assessing property for taxation on Port Royal Island, I was much surprised to learn the extreme poverty in which they are living. Those who have owned their land, to all practical purposes, for five and six years, owning, as a rule, nothing but their ten acres and a negro cabin. A few owned a hog or two, a less number, a cow or a mule. I had supposed every land-owner to possess his pig and his poultry, but it was far from the case. There is not one in ten who gets his living from his land solely, and those who work for wages and are not land-owners live the best. Still, as a matter of development, this land-owning will work great advantage, for it will show to themselves, as well as to those interested in them, their real capacity.

Now, as to what is being done for them, movements have been made of a political nature which are fraught with momentous interest. First, there is their perfect equality in the Courts of Justice. It is something of a new and strange matter for Courts to be made up, whether as touching its juries, or its lawyers, or its officers, in the State of South Carolina, without regard to color. The sensation is peculiar in this town of Beaufort, to see a Court in session, where former slaves sit side by side with their old owners on the jury, where white men are tried by a mixed jury, where colored lawyers plead, and where white and colored officers maintain order. But this is done at every Court, and Justice is not overwhelmed. Of course, there are those who have feelings of deep, silent repugnance; but no one is shocked in his innate sense of justice or in his instincts of moral propriety. The growth there is in it toward responsible citizenship or the moral responsiveness of true manhood cannot be measured by words. As yet, nothing seems the worse for the change.

But this does not stand by itself. The State has, in the exercise of a far-reaching wisdom, been divided into townships after the New-England pattern. In the exercise of their functions of citizenship in these townships, all of the lower classes in the State will, whether black or white, gain more political sense and knowledge than from all other sources combined. The townships have already been organized on those islands, and I suppose throughout the State, by the enumeration and election of temporary town officers; the annual town meeting has been held and permanent officers chosen, among whom there is a representatives of negroes, according to capacity. In the Township of Beaufort the REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The week just closed was quite a busy one, though the total amount sold is rather small. The two or three rainy days sadly interfered with the sales, caused the adjournment of one before it was half finished, and prevented several others from being commenced. On Thursday two large sales were promised. One by Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO., at Avenel, and the other by Messrs. MALLORY & BLACKWELL, at Sing Sing. About 11 o'clock rain commenced falling, by 12 a regular storm had set in and the auctioneers were compelled to defer operations and wait for clear weather. These facts considered, and remembering that out-of-town sales were held on two days only, Tuesday and Wednesday, the results are quite satisfactory. Public interest in these sales does not flag yet; on the contrary, it is continually increasing, and is gaining too, among the better class of citizens; gentlemen who, at first paid but little attention to, and seldom, if ever, visited them. This may of course, be accounted for by the influence of the old evil days at the saleroom, when all sorts of trickery were indulged in, and respectable and responsible persons were not infrequently a little afraid to bid. It took some little time to convince them that the same arts and shams had not followed the auctioneers out into the country and been practiced at suburban sales. As soon though as they were thoroughly convinced, and became fully satisfied that these sales were honest and as represented, the good effects became visible, and now the audiences are quite as good, quite as prompt to bid, and quite as ready to buy as they were at the Exchange during its best days.

The sales for the week were as follows:

New-York improved property	$13,025
New-York leased property	10,000
Country improved property	16,250
Country unimproved property	72,511
Total	$105,786

The sales for the previous week were:

New-York improved property	$137,800
New-York unimproved property	67,000
Country improved property	20,050
Country unimproved property	67,731
Total for week ending June 5	$321,581
Total from June 1 to June 5	262,561
Total for week ending June 12	105,786
Total for month of January	2,263,721
Total for month of February	2,175,985
Total for month of March	14,047,845
Total for month of April	2,295,234
Total for month of May	1,870,039
Grand total	$24,542,765

The coming week promises to be a very busy one. Sales are advertised for every day. Even Monday and Saturday, two days set down on the auctioneer's catalogue as days of rest, are to be occupied, and on each of them quite a large sale is to be made.

To-day Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, JR. & BROTHER will continue their sale at Avenel. They have yet 100 villa plots to dispose of. The sale was commenced on the 2d inst., but a storm necessitated an adjournment very early in the day. The sale of the remaining lots was then postponed until the 10th. That day it rained steadily, and the sale was again postponed until the 14th; it, also, was a rainy day, and the sale was finally postponed until to-day, when, if the weather is fair, it will positively be finished. The lots are quite desirable and should all together a large crowd. The sale will be absolute and without limit. A special train will leave the foot of Cortlandt-street at 2 o'clock P. M. Free passes, maps, &c., may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 26 Pine-street.

To-morrow Messrs. JOHNSON & MILLER have their continuation sale of the "Nostrand Farm" property, at Clarenceville, L. I. It also was adjourned on account of a rain-storm. The property is nicely situated, convenient to New-York, and worthy of the special attention of mechanics and others who wish comfortable and economical homes. Boats to meet the special train will leave the foot of Grand and Roosevelt streets at 10 o'clock A. M. A lunch will be served before the sale. Free tickets and particulars may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 25 Nassau-street.

The same day Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO. will offer 400 lots of ground at Rutgers Park, New-Jersey, within twenty minutes' drive of Newark. The property is handsomely located on the Passaic River, commands fine views of the mountains and the surrounding beautiful country. It stretches along the Passaic River from Belleville to North Belleville, ascending gradually from the banks of the river to hills 150 to 200 feet in height, crowned with beautiful groves of chestnut and oak, and in connection with the suburban villas of Newark, Woodside and Belleville, forms a part of a very charming and picturesque country. Several bridges span the river, affording facilities for pleasant drives along both sides of the stream and to Rutherford Park, Kingsland Farm, Passaic, Woodside, Bloomfield and Orange, or along the Newark Boulevard, which will be completed this Summer, and which runs through the entire property of the Association. An excursion train will leave foot of Cortlandt-street at 11 o'clock A. M. on the day of sale. Refreshments will be furnished on the premises. Tickets will be issued by the auctioneers at their office, No. 77 Cedar-street.

The same day Messrs. MALLORY & BLACKWELL have their combination sale of valuable business and manufacturing lots on Orchard and other streets, including water fronts, within 200 yards of depot and steamboat landing, located at Tarrytown, N. Y. The sale will be made on the premises, to commence at 3 o'clock P. M.

On Wednesday Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO. have a sale on the premises of seventy-five villa plots, located at Plainfield, N. J., (known as the Raymond property.) These lots are well located at the base of the Blue Range of Mountains, fronting on the main road to Scotch Plains, and in the midst of fine residences occupied by New-Yorkers. They are but one hour from New-York, on the line of the Central Railroad of New-Jersey, and in a very beautiful section of the country. A special train will leave the foot of Liberty-street at 11 o'clock A. M. Tickets may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 26 Pine-street. A lunch will be served before the arrival of the train.

The same day Messrs. ALDRIDGE & WOOD will sell at West End, City of Bergen, N. J., sixty building lots. The lots are beautifully located, and the surroundings are all first-class. A large hotel has just been completed. The property is laid out and intended for private residences, and to be free from nuisances. For perfect healthfulness and easy accessibility it is equal to any point in the vicinity of New-York. From any part of the City below Canal-street it can be reached in less time than even Madison-square, and conveyances much more comfortable. A special train will leave the foot of Cortlandt-street at 12 o'clock. A lunch will be served at the St. James Hotel on the arrival of the train. Free tickets, maps and particulars may be had of ALDRIDGE & WOOD, auctioneers, Hudson City, near Court-house; LEWIS E. WOOD, No. 69 Montgomery-street, Jersey City; W. A. COLLINS, No. 36 Pine-street, New-York, or St. James Hotel, on the premises.

The same day Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO. commence their second great annual sale of the property of the Rutherford Park Association. This property is situated on the banks of the beautiful Passaic River, nine miles, or forty-five minutes from New-York City Hall, within a stone's throw of the new depot on the New-York and Oswego Midland Counties Railway, now building. Maps and free passes at the office of the auctioneers, A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., No. 77 Cedar-street, New-York, or at the office of the Company, No. 120 Hudson-street, Jersey City. Special train at 11 A. M. on the day of sale, for which free passes will be furnished. Other trains at 9:15 and 10 A. M., 12 M., and 1:45 P. M.

On Thursday, Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO. will, by order of DuWITT CLINTON JONES, Esq., sell 200 villa plots, located at New-Providence Station, on the Morris and Essex Railroad, about one hour from New-York and one mile from Summit. These lots are situated in a very attractive region of New-Jersey, among fine improvements, and immediately on the station; the views are very fine, embracing the lovely Passaic Valley, the Orange Mountains, and the vicinity of Summit. There will also be offered a desirable modern cottage, recently completed, and an attractive cottage. Special train from the foot of Barclay-street, at 11 A. M. Collation on the arrival of the train. For catalogue maps, and full particulars, apply at the office of the auctioneers, No. 26 Pine-street, New-York.

The same day, at Greenville, N. J., Mr. LEWIS E. WOOD will sell 120 valuable lots, at Greenville, N. J., at auction, twenty minutes' drive from Liberty-street, New-York, by the Central Railroad of New-Jersey, and thirty minutes' drive from Wall-street or the City Hall, New-York. All the lots are beautifully located on high ground, commanding an extensive view of the Bay and City of New-York, Brooklyn, Staten Island, Long Island, &c. The property to be sold is adjacent to and near the Eastern Boulevard of Hudson County, and a short distance from the station of the Central Railroad. Twenty-two trains daily, each way, between Greenville and New-York. For particulars inquire at the Post Office Building, Greenville, N. J., or LEWIS E. WOOD, No. 69 Montgomery-street, Jersey City, or M. ARMSTRONG, No. 19 Ferry-st., New-York.

On Friday Messrs. MALLORY & BLACKWELL have a very attractive sale at Sing Sing, N. Y. The property belongs to the Clark estate, is beautifully located, commands fine views of the Hudson River, Palisades, &c., &c. The neighborhood is excellent, and the surroundings are all first-class. The steamer Antiope will leave the foot of Harrison-street at 8 o'clock, and the foot of Thirty-fourth-street at 8½ A. M. on the day of sale. A lunch will be served on the premises. Tickets, maps and particulars may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 88 Liberty-street.

On Saturday, Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co. have a large sale at Douglaston, L. I. The property consists of 100 building lots, situated on high ground, overlooking Little Neck Bay, a large mansion containing seventeen rooms, and nine small cottages. A special train will leave Hunter's Point on the day of sale, at 10:30 A. M. Boats leave James-slip and Thirty-fourth-street at 10 A. M. Free tickets for excursion train will be furnished at office of auctioneers, No. 77 Cedar-street, New-York.

On Friday last the Board of Real Estate Brokers of the City of New-York elected the following gentlemen officers for the ensuing year: President, Mr. WM. H. RAYNOR; Vice-President, Mr. M. A. J. LYNCH; Treasurer, Mr. V. K. STEVENSON, Jr.; Secretary, Mr. G. LEEPHASEE.

400 LOTS OF GROUND

AT RUTGER PARK, N. J.,

Twenty minutes' drive from New-York, on the west bank of the Passaic River.

This great property consists of the finest views of both sides of the River, and of the mountain scenery of the lovely country in which it lies. It stretches along the Passaic River from Belleville to North Belleville, ascending gradually from the banks of the river to hills 150 to 200 feet in height, crowned with beautiful groves of chestnut and oak, and in connection with the suburban villas of Newark, Woodside and Belleville, forms a part of a very charming and picturesque country in the vicinity of New-York. Several bridges span the river, affording facilities for the most pleasant drives along both sides of the stream, and to Rutherford Park, Kingsland Farm, Passaic, Woodside, Bloomfield and Orange, or along the Newark Boulevard, which will be completed this Summer, and which runs through the entire property of the Association. Newark and Belleville Horse-car Lines, which will be extended through the entire property, offering passengers an opportunity to go to Newark or to New-York by cars, the North and Erie Roads, or the New-Jersey Railroad. Other railroads are in contemplation, and there will be in a short time, within a circuit of 1½ to 2 miles, six depots on railroads leading to New-York.

Distance from New-York 9 miles, time 45 minutes.

The pipes of the newly-created Newark Water Works are carried through the land, and can supply each house throughout at any height with pure whole some water, in the same manner that houses in New-York are supplied with Croton.

The land is of great depth, abundant in and is rich in manure, and is noted for its pure air and healthful name. The neighborhood is of the best character; churches and excellent schools are near by, and there will be Academy of Music and Library. The lots are large, ranging from 50 to 200 feet each. The sale will be Absolute. No bidding will be permitted on account of the Association. The title is old and perfect. Terms, one-fourth cash, balance on credit of one, two and three years, or may be paid in quarterly or half-yearly installments.

An excursion train will be provided, which will leave foot of Cortlandt-st., New-York, at 11 o'clock A. M. on the day of sale. Refreshments will be furnished on the premises. Tickets will be issued by the auctioneers at their office, No. 77 Cedar-st., New-York.

ALDRIDGE & WOOD, Auctioneers.

60 BEAUTIFUL BUILDING LOTS

AT WEST END, CITY OF BERGEN, N. J., AT AUCTION.

ON WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1869, at 3½ o'clock, on the premises.

Only eight minutes by New-Jersey Railroad from Jersey Depot, foot of Cortlandt-st. (Delaware sta.) Twenty-six trains daily; also, three lines of horse cars running every fifteen minutes from Jersey City Ferry, Cortlandt, Desbrosses and Barclay-sts., Jersey City and Christopher sts., to Hudson City, Five Corners, and Paterson Ferry, Chambers and 23d sts., running within two blocks of this property.

Water, gas, sewers, shade trees, fine soil, and the surroundings all first-class. Magnificent hotel just completed; all modern improvements; accessible location for 200 guests. Gas, water and sewers in the main streets; the property is laid out in streets 60 feet wide, perfectly healthful and easy accessibility; no nuisances anywhere in the vicinity of New-York. Trains may be taken at the Jersey City Ferry, and in less time than that from Madison-square, and conveyances much more comfortable. Personal inspection in the lower part of the City can be made by the Hudson tubes, P. M., or by the P. R. R. cars, leaving at their dinner.

FREE RIDING ON THE DAY OF SALE.

Parties taking the 12 M. train, foot of Cortlandt-st., will be passengers free.

FREE LUNCH AT THE ST. JAMES HOTEL, at 12½ P. M., and have time to take the property over before the hour of sale. Those taking the 1 P. M. train will arrive in time for the sale.

THE NEW WEST.

The Iron Highway to the Pacific—Condition Under which it was Built—Quality of the Work Performed—Encouraging Business of the Road—Flattering Prospects.

From Our Own Correspondent.

OMAHA, Saturday, June 5, 1869.

"Passengers for the Union Pacific Railroad, this coach!" cried the 'bus-driver, putting his head in at the door of our car as the train came to a halt at Council Bluffs. It roused me as from a dream, that announcement, prosaic and commonplace as it was to him; for, whirling up and down these Mississippi States as I have been for the fortnight past, journeying in a vague and vagrant way, drawn on by the charm of the ever-less variety presented by this progressive and expanding West, yet confused a little by the sense of limitless space, I had almost lost the notion of definite destination till that cry came to fix those wayward moods in the thought that here at length was the starting-point for the grand jaunt. Here is the starting-point; the goal is yonder, on the shores of the sea that laves the coasts of the East and of India.

Four roads, gathering up the network of railway communications of the six Mississippi states, converge upon Omaha; and here they run into one thread—one iron thread, which, traversing ocean-like prairies and climbing vast mountain pinnacles, stops only on the Golden Coast, nigh two thousand miles away. It may be that custom will bye-and-bye stale the novelty of the trans-continental ride, (for the time is not distant when an American will be ashamed to paste of Burgundy sights who has not seen the unparalleled marvels of nature and scenery that lie between the Mississippi and the Pacific Ocean,) but it is yet too fresh for one, however blasé, not to feel a vivifying flip at the thought of what lies before him in this "the grand tour." And, for the moment, I put out of mind all the little questionings and doubts which have arisen as to the Pacific Railroad and its excellence or otherwise, and whether it will pay, and who has made money out of it, and the Fisk botherations; and I think only of the enterprise in its grand general relations and outcome. I think of it as carrying population into the wild, and quickly transforming buffalo ranges into populous States. I think of it in its vast bearings on our continental and international exchanges. And I think of it not only in these its direct results, but in all that will grow out of it; for every great new development of material enterprise produces effects undreamed of by its projectors. And, finally, I think of it as the realization of the magnificent idea which the faith of the nation inspired. That faith will not be baulked, I am sure; for aside from all questions of detail, the Pacific Railroad is to-day, beyond a doubt, the grand success of the century.

It is my purpose to write of the Pacific Railroad precisely as I find it to be, after spending much time upon it as to authorize my forming an opinion. I believe the public desire such a faithful exposition, distraught as it has been by conflicting statements. It is hardly likely that the maledictions of that Government Commissioner who went over the track in a befuddled condition and did not get a coal contract, can have produced any considerable amount of adverse opinion of the road. Nevertheless a variety of influences—most of them of no greater respectability or authority—have conspired to diffuse vague suspicions that the Pacific Railway is somehow a sort of swindle and failure.

And by some odd freak of luck these suspicions have fallen exclusively on that major stretch of the continental highway known as the Union Pacific Railroad, while the western section, called the Central Pacific Railroad, has wholly escaped censure. On this head, I may say that some time ago I had an opportunity of conversing with one whose official Governmental connection with the roads gives him the best opportunity of knowing their actual condition, and whose highly-instructed engineering talent lends the utmost weight to his judgment, and from him I learned that the construction of the Union Pacific is not only equal to that of the Central Pacific, but on the average better. Moreover, as to the "thrift" which the directors of the Union Pacific are supposed to have displayed, and the skill with which they turned the enterprise to their own pecuniary profit, it is a matter of entire certainty that if the method of manipulation in the case of the Central Pacific was different from that of the Union Pacific, the "thrift" was in each case the same, and the spoils not less in the one enterprise than in the other.

But, regarding the whole matter of "thrift," the question arises, if the contractors in each road made money, had not they a perfect right to do so? The Government was generous and liberal in its aid. It was so in order to encourage parties to take hold of the enterprise. Yet, even with the large subsidies which were granted, it will be remembered that men were slow in entering on undertakings so vast in their compass and so uncertain in their result. If, then, those who actually did risk themselves on problematical projects found profit in so doing, are they to be blamed? The construction was subject to the limitations of the terms of a contract with the Government. These terms were precise in their requirements; and it needed the attestation of Government Commissioners that these requirements had been fulfilled before the bonds were issued. This approval has been given to every section of the Union Pacific Road save the last eighty-five miles, on which portion the official examination has not yet been ordered; and the character of the gentlemen who now compose the Commission gives the best assurance that, in this matter the Government's interests will be vigilantly and scrupulously guarded.

I was already prepared, before I came here, to believe that the Union Pacific Railroad has of late been greatly maligned. While traveling through various parts of the West, I made it my business to inquire of such practical railroad men who had gone over the road, and who were so situated as to be in no danger of bias in its favor, their judgment on its character. I never heard but one opinion: "The Union Pacific Railroad has been grossly abused." "It is a very good road—a greatly deal better than very many of your Eastern roads." Such was the universal testimony. Then since I came here I have seen a very large number of gentlemen who have come through to this point from the Pacific Coast, and who unanimously express themselves as delighted with the comfort and smoothness of the ride, and most agreeably disappointed at the contrast which the reality of the Pacific Railroad presents with the bugaboo stories whose invention they attribute to the jealousy of the rival sea-line from California. The letters which these gentlemen are writing back to their friends will have a powerful influence in diverting the tide of travel from the steamers to the railroad, and that not alone for those who desire speed in the transit, but for all who are looking to enjoyment on the trip.

And now, it will narrow down this whole question of the quality of the road, and give us the basis of a fair opinion thereon, if we consider for a moment the condition under which the Union Pacific Railroad has been built. Pushing itself out into a vast Wild, utterly destitute of the first vestige of material requisite for its construction, the road in imperfect shape was the first condition for the road in perfect shape. It was absolutely necessary first of all, to have a track as a means of transport, for everything had to be brought up at least five hundred miles to Omaha and then sent forward, there being nothing on the ground. Well, gradually as the work went forward, the constructors were able to go back and round off that which was rough-hewn. The ballasting was rendered more complete, wooden bridges were replaced by structures of stone and iron, and much varied improvements made that last year a million and a half of dollars was expended in bettering these portions of the road already accepted by the Government. Accordingly, when at the close of the year a special commission, with an engineer distinguished by the close and critical cast of his mind, was appointed to examine the road, that Commission was able to say of the nine hundred miles then built, that the road was "well constructed and a credit to the Company, while if deficiencies exist they are such as are incident to all new roads."

It seems plain, then, that any foundation which the late hostile criticisms of the Pacific Railroad may have had, must rest on the condition of that portion of the road last built. I do not find that the officials here claim that part of the track to be perfect; but it is now in vastly better condition than it was ten days ago, and the Government retains ample security that it will be brought up to the standard of the contract. The last two or three hundred miles were pushed through with unexampled rapidity. It was a race between the two great rivals in the continental enterprise. Nothing is easier than to understand the motives of the two companies. It was a fair game. I may mention that some months ago the Central Pacific Road had placed at a point, some hundreds of miles this side of Salt Lake, a post which indicated where they meant to come, on. The Union Pacific, of course, pushed their work to the utmost limit of rapidity; the road-bed, accordingly, was on this section made at a time when the frost was not yet out of the ground, and a good deal of imperfection was the result. But this is all amending now, and all important deficiencies will very shortly be removed. For example, the famous "Wahsatch E," (90 miles from Omaha,)—a place of temporary excitement—is now no more, the permanent cradle having been finished. And advices to the Superintendent here state that in a month the track from Bryan to the terminus at Promontory (220 miles) will be in as good condition as the same number of miles of railroad in any of the Western States. When this is brought up, the entire road will take rank with almost any in the country.

If then, some temporary deficiencies have been the inevitable attendant of the unexampled rapidity with which this colossal work has been pushed through, these are far outweighed by the broad fact that the road is finished, and finished seven years earlier than the charter demanded. It can not be doubted that it was the wiser policy to permit some imperfections, and consequently incur a somewhat increased ultimate cost to the company rather than to aim at immediate perfection and lose the more important element of time. "A matter of the greatest importance," says General WARREN, "and highly creditable to the able managers of the company, is that all deficiencies can be supplied at an outlay but little exceeding that which would have obviated them in the first instance, but at the cost of materially retarding the progress of the great work." This view of the matter commends itself as sound logic, for without entering into details of calculation, it must be manifest that the saving to the Government by the earlier completion of the road and the benefit to the whole country by the growth of its productive forces in the opening up of the plains to immigration and settlement is the one consideration that overtops every other.

I now come to the prime question: Will the Union Pacific Railroad pay?

This question is closely bound up with the theory of the construction of the road. It is possible that in the Board or Direction there may formerly have been those who, not deeming the prospects of business adequate to reward the building of a first-class road, looked upon the enterprise rather as a speculation out of which money was to be made in the meantime. But this is not at all the view of the present Direction nor of its chief. I know that it is the opinion of the eminent President, Mr. OLIVER AMES—an opinion which he lately expressed here after a careful survey of the whole matter—that the Union Pacific Railroad will pay to equip as a first-class road and to run as a first-class road. This opinion, from this source, gives the best assurance that it will be put in first-class condition.

While I am writing this evening as to the prospects of the Pacific Railroad I hear an animated conversation on the same subject, going on around me on the part of a number of distinguished railroad and business men, composing the party that has come here to-day on the occasion of the opening of the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad through to Omaha—and including such men as WILSON G. HUNT, DAVID DOWS, J. F. TRACEY, D. TORRENCE, J. TILLINGHAST and others—and among all these gentlemen there is but one view, and that is that the Union Pacific Railroad will pay.

However, as facts are of more authority than speculations, it may be of value to give some data as to the present earnings of the road, and then to indicate some of the sources on which the Company may rely for a large and increasing business.

The returns of the earnings from passengers and freight for the month of May have not yet been made up, but those for March and April run as follows:

Passengers.—In March the earnings from the transport of passengers was $175,000; in April they were $240,000—an increase of nearly one hundred per cent.! But these returns were for a term prior to the opening of the through route. The month of May and the current month will show a remarkable increment. The through travel has quite exceeded the expectations of the officials here. A few days ago, for example, a single train brought hither one hundred and forty through passengers from San Francisco. At present the average will exceed fifty through passengers each way per day. It is calculated that by the month of August the earnings on passengers will reach $1,000,000 per month.

Freight.—In the month of March the amount of "commercial freight" carried was 5,326 tons, the receipts for which were $220,272 96. The amount of "contractors' freight" was 8,084 tons, on which the earnings were $136,480 07.

In April the total "commercial freight" was 8,344 tons, on which the receipts were $204,834 30. "Contractors' freight," 10,325 tons; "Government," 473 tons; earnings, $16,923 21.

It will now be in order to look a little into the actual elements of the future development of which the prosperity of the enterprise must depend.

The vast land-domain of the Union Pacific Railroad is available in two ways: firstly, in the profits to be derived from the sales of land; secondly, in the increasing business which the settling up of the country will bring to the Company, by adding a profitable "way" traffic to the "through" business.

The soil of Nebraska, through which the road runs, consists, for the first two hundred miles west from the Missouri river, of rich prairie-land, magnificently adapted for agriculture; then of a long stretch of fine grazing country; then of formations useless for agriculture but rich in mineral resources.

Leaving out of view, for the moment, the first two, I shall touch on one of the resources coming under the last category. Precisely at the point where the country ceases to be available for farming purposes, namely, on the Laramie Plains and the mountains to the west, a discovery of incalculable value has been made in enormous beds of excellent coal. These coal "measures" extend all the way from Carbon to Echo—a distance of 280 miles. At Carbon Station, 650 miles west of Omaha, a vein 16 feet in thickness, is being worked, and over 200 tons a day is taken out. This discovery is of a double importance; for not only is it a source of economy to the Company by furnishing a better coal for locomotives than the Iowa coal, and at greatly reduced prices, but as supplying a desideratum that will vastly facilitate immigration. There is an almost total absence of timber in Nebraska, and the emigrant might well hesitate to locate in a region where wood for fuel must necessarily be so high. The exhaustless supply of coal perfectly meets this objection, for the facilities of the Company will enable to furnish it at a minimum price.

It ought to be, and doubtless will be, the aim of the Company to pursue a liberal and enlightened policy toward settlers—toward those who propose to cast their fortunes with the domain through which the road runs. I understand that at the last meeting of the Board in Boston, the subject of facilities and decreased through fares for immigrants was under discussion. The Company cannot too soon institute a generous theory of action in this regard. It appears that in the course of a week or two the lands of the road are to be thrown open for sale; but before then all possible inducements to new comers should be presented. Already a steady stream of immigration is flowing hitherward, and settlements are rapidly forming along the line of the Pacific Railroad: but it will come in an ocean-wave if no obstacles are presented, and I believe none will be.

I am not going to present a cento of the state-ment of this vast enterprise, for that is wholly impossible in one such as this; and hence, for the present, I shall confine myself to one or two of the sources of business for the Pacific Railroad. Well, then, after passing over the country already traversed, the road leaps Colorado and Utah, and, in a large business of both of which places it must constantly increase in volume; but I shall not be able to write of them after going over the country. There then remains the through freight and passenger trade. This can hardly be said to be yet initiated; for the Central Pacific Company has not hitherto shown a willingness to enter into a common task, and until this is done large or permanent business cannot be expected. I have seen numerous letters from merchants and shippers in Chicago, New-York and elsewhere, inquiring of the officials here what such and such an article could be transported for; and these varied inquiries and suggestions give new and enlarged conceptions of the amount of business that awaits the road when once a fair through tariff is arranged. I learn that since the new management of the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific shows a more accommodating spirit, and it is hoped that a satisfactory agreement will soon be perfected.

Such are some of the present general aspects of the Pacific Railroad; yet after all the enumeration we can make of the natural resources on which it may depend, it is not to be doubted that other and as yet unknown elements which will work to the benefit of the enterprise, will show themselves. The road itself will be the means of developing new feeders and auxiliaries; for a railroad is a creature that "makes the meat it feeds on." Already we have an illustration of this in the accounts which just now reach us of the discovery of an extensive outcome of oil in the Bitter Creek region. Then, again, new agencies and adaptations will suggest themselves from time to time to reduce the expenses of the Company. It has been a colossal enterprise executed under every conceivable disadvantage and under circumstances that made extravagant cost inevitable. But the Company is rapidly working out of all these drawbacks and improving its road while adopting new economies.

I am now about to start on a careful examination of the road. I shall not hesitate to write of aught I see amiss. But so far I have had only inspiring views of the success of the great continental highway, and I am sure the country at large cannot but desire that it should be a success, when we consider the vast and far-reaching interests the nation has wrapped up therein.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

Bishop Potter on the Infallibility of the Episcopal Prayer Book.

An elegant little alcove church, capable of seating 200 or 300 persons, recently completed in Seventy-fourth-street, near Fourth-avenue, to be called the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Rev. J. TUTTLE SMITH, rector, was opened for religious services yesterday. There was a very full attendance of worshipers. After the usual introductory services, in which the pastor, Rev. Mr. SMITH, officiated, Right Rev. Bishop POTTER preached the opening sermon from the text, 2d Epistle of Paul to the Colossians, 6th and 7th verses: "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving." The Apostle, said the speaker, every where assumes that the fundamental principles of Christianity can be ascertained; that all and all the truths taught therein are infallible and immutable, so the Apostles exhorted the Christians to stand firm in these truths—and be rooted and established in the faith. They were expected to be so well grounded in the faith as hardly to know that there was not such a thing as a doubt. So ought it be now with Christians at the present day. They need not fear to impair the freedom of the mind by holding as immutable those truths that are so. They can have fixed opinions upon religion, and yet find ample field for discursive thought and speculation. If Christ be the Son of God, we need no need to know it, and to know it as a certainty! Ought it not to be an every-day household truth and conviction, telling us what to think and do? What are the shadows of mere opinion and speculation, in the arm of science against the trials of life and the struggles of the last dreadful day? The Colossians received the truths of Christianity from living teachers, while as yet they had never seen a line of the written word of the New Testament. The Epistles were not written so much to impart new truths as to confirm the teachings already given by the teachers, in the Gospels. Now, remembering that the Epistles were sent to persons who were already Christians, how would they be read and interpreted? Would each person interpret them according to his way and fancy, or according to the instructions he had received? Suppose the Christian children who had learned their catechism, and were already rooted and grounded in the fundamental truths of the Church. With the aid of this light they could interpret aright the Epistles of Paul. Thus would it be with our children if care be taken to train them properly.

The Bishop then proceeded to set forth the peculiar fitness and adaptability of the Episcopal Prayer Book and the established service of that Church for the moulding of religious truth as taught in the Bible. The Prayer Book was the gift of the Church of Christian ages, and bore the impress of the wisdom and piety of all the past. Every line of it almost was replete with Bible truth and much of it in the precise language of the Scripture. If perchance there were passages which seem to be at variance with the Bible, the Church of Christ, throughout the world, it was worthy of reflection whether the conceptions or judgments of the individual mind were not more likely to be erroneous than this book which contained the matured wisdom and piety of all many generations. For this part he would consider it more likely that all the people of this or any other organization were mistaken than that any passage of the Prayer Book be in error.

The speaker closed by congratulating his hearers on the auspicious circumstances of the inauguration of this new edifice, which had been reared with so much zeal, piety and devotion, and paid a high compliment to the young gentleman who was to be the rector of the new church. A collection was then taken up to relieve the church of the debt of $7,000, which, on the sittings in the church are to be free, it is necessary should be liquidated as soon as possible.

Rev. Dr. Montgomery on "Ritualism a Form of Jesuitical Craft."

In conformity with the purpose of the congregation worshiping in the Protestant Episcopal Church in Thirty-first-street, near Second-avenue, to raise a fund for some internal improvements in the church by a course of sermons by noted divines, Rev. Dr. MONTGOMERY preached last evening to a very full congregation, on the subject of Ritualism. He selected as his text the words of Paul, "I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve, your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

Beginning his discourse by a reference to a similar tendency toward Ritualism, which marked the history of the Church some thirty years back, and which ended then in the departure of many from the Protestant to enter the bosom of the Romish Church, he prophesied for the present movement a similar fate. Though he had heard the same counsel given now which was given then, to let the movement alone, and not give it dignity or importance by preaching and writing about it—he nevertheless deemed it as imperative Christian duty of all to whom the Protestant faith is dear to preach and teach and speak against innovations which tend to destroy the very foundations and purity of the Christian religion. All the prominent leaders in the former movement toward Ritualism ended in the Romish Church, and there they properly belong. The assumption that it can be made legitimately a part of the Protestant Church, as handed down to us by our fathers, is but a new form of Jesuitical craft, and those entertaining Ritualism are nothing else than Jesuits in disguise.

After describing at length the ritual and doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, he declared them identical with those avowed by modern Ritualists. Doctor PUSEY had already sent a peace offering to the Pope, and Dr. COXE of the American Church is severely criticised for his just rebuke of that letter. So dangerous is this tendency to become a part of the purity of the Protestant Church, that Archbishop CUMMINGS himself has avowed that the Ritualists in the Protestant Church have relieved the Catholic priesthood of the labor of proselytism. In this announcement Doctor CUMMINGS was clearly correct, for certainly as either clergy or laymen begin these innovations on the purity and simplicity of the Protestant faith, so certainly will they not stop short of the Romish Church, and its blasphemous doctrines of Transubstantiation and Conditional pardons. The question is now being considered whether these Ritualists do not violate the laws of the Church, and if it shall be discovered that the precedent in this respect are not sufficiently clear, care shall be taken to make such suitable laws hereafter. The orator concluded his very lengthy discourse by urging on the congregation the necessity of cash and all, both in life and conversation, to see to it that the faith of their fathers is preserved in its primitive simplicity and purity, and that they be not corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ," to that doctrine of sonnous forms which makes of the spiritual remembrance of the Saviour's sacrifice a casualty, and blasphemous repeat, or that other and not less dangerous doctrine of confession, which enslaves women and ultimate priests.

Free Services at Cooper Institute.

The free services at Cooper Institute yesterday, were conducted by Rev. WARREN H. CUDWORTH, of East Boston. In the evening quite a large congregation was present, and Mr. CUDWORTH took as the subject of his discourse, [illegible] Dr. Gwood's Successor at the Church of the Messiah—Sermon by Rev. Geo. H. Hepworth.

One of the most intellectual congregations in this City is that which worships in the Unitarian Church of the Messiah, Park-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street. Up to a few months since Rev. Dr. SAMUEL OSGOOD ministered in this Church, but owing to ill health he was compelled to cease his labors, and is now in Europe. The congregation have called Rev. GEO. H. HEPWORTH, of Boston, to fill the pulpit thus left vacant, and yesterday morning that gentleman preached his first sermon before his new auditors. He succeeded in making an excellent impression on the minds of his hearers, and will doubtless become a favorite in his new field of labor. Mr. HEPWORTH is young and has very much the style of speaking that characterizes EDWIN BOOTH. His manner is pleasing in the extreme, and his intonation of voice fairly musical, evincing great cultivation. Naturally gifted with a poetic imagination, he interspersed his discourse with apposite rhetorical illustrations, that do not fail to attract the undivided attention of his hearers; while, at the same time, the eminently practical view of thought that runs through his sermons is well calculated to prove him a deep thinker as well as a pleasing rhetorician. Although not a "pulpit-pounder," he evinces an earnestness of purpose in presenting his ideas that inveriably makes an impression on his auditors. His speech is ready and fluent, and his appeals in favor of living up to the high aspirations of our spiritual nature are couched in most emphatic, yet decidedly attractive, phrase.

He took as his text, yesterday, the words of our Savior, "I am the Light of the World." From this announcement made by the Redeemer, he showed how great was God's love for mankind, and how his paternal care was observable in every act of our lives. He disclaimed the idea of terror, as attaching to the Almighty, and presented Him as a loving father, whose benefaction is apparent even in His chastisements. He concluded admonition to the sinners of Divinity, because of the goodness inherent in the Godhead, which works for our benefit even when it appears to be subjecting us to the ordeal of sorrow. The reverend gentleman's discourse was listened to with most profound attention, and seemed to give immense satisfaction to the highly intellectual congregation over whom he has been called to preside. At the close of the sermon, the members of the church partook of the sacrament. Mr. HEPWORTH will regularly cater on his pastoral duties on the first Sunday in October next, until which time they will be no services in this church.

Ordination of a Missionary.

Mr. EDWARD RIGGS was ordained, last evening, as a missionary, by the Fourth Presbytery of New-York, in the West Presbyterian Church in Forty-second-street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues. The services were attended by a large congregation. After the ordinary service of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. THOMAS S. HASTINGS, D. D., pastor of the Church, preached a sermon from St. Matthew, vi., 14, in which he dwelt upon the duty of preaching the Gospel faithfully in all parts of the world, discussing the missionary prayer and the missionary motive. Rev. DAVID D. DWIGHT offered the ordaining prayer, and Rev. GEORGE W. WOOD, D. D., Secretary of the American Board of Christian Foreign Missions, formerly himself a missionary to Constantinople, delivered the charge to the candidate, in which he urged him especially to do all that lay in his power to promote the interests of the Robert College in Turkey, (whither the missionary goes,) endowed by Mr. C. R. ROBERT, a member of this Church, where native young men are trained to the ministry. He called upon him to foster a spirit of independence in the native churches, leading them to depend more and more on their own success rather than upon aid from here. Finally he exhorted him to faithfulness, earnestness, humility and devotion in his works, and asked the divine blessing upon him and his.

Mr. RIGGS is a son of Rev. Dr. RIGGS, of Constantinople. He was married last week to a daughter of the late Rev. H. G. O. DWIGHT, a missionary to Constantinople. Mr. RIGGS and his bride were both born in that city, and return thither; thus making it the third generation in succession, in the same family, that has been so engaged. The scene of Mr. RIGGS' missionary labors is to be Sivas, in the interior of Turkey.

Baccalaureate Sermon by Rev. Dr. Adams.

Rev. Dr. ADAMS preached, last night, a baccalaureate sermon, at his church on Madison-square, to the graduating class of the City College. He said that the reason given to men by God should be dedicated to the service of their fellow-creatures. He spoke of the fine poetry of the ancients, which had been marred by immorality; of that of the earlier modern writers, that had been similarly stained, and of POMEROY, who had devoted his prodigious powers to simply committing unimportant lines to memory. GIBBON was, he thought, in placing the finishing touch to his "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," in which much scepticism had been displayed, must have felt a secret misgiving as to the value of his work, and yet, having aiming to Russell explain the enigma of life, refused to receive its only solvent, the Christian faith. There was a deep meaning, the speaker remarked, in the prize that had been offered at Princeton to the graduating student who had been most a "gentleman." Much was comprehended in the word. It had been said that Jesus Christ was the highest type of a gentleman that had ever breathed. That man led the truest life, who thought the least of himself and the most of others, and the whole chemistry of existence showed, as the bottom of the crucible, Christian usefulness as the rich precipitate. Each position of the speaker was interestingly illustrated.

Hebrew Free Schools—Examination at Steinway Hall.

The fourth annual examination of the Hebrew Free Schools of New-York took place yesterday forenoon at Steinway Hall.

There were present about 600 children, together with a large number of the parents and friends, including Drs. ISAACS, CRAMER, GUTENBERG, PHILLIPS, WATERMAN, VEDENIER and GOLDSTEIN. There were seven classes in all examined in their various branches of study, the children acquitting themselves with much credit. The examination was varied by recitations by some of the scholars in English, German and Hebrew, and concluded with short addresses by Dr. ISAACS and ABRAHAM OTTINGER, Esq., the President of the Association, in which they thanked those who had contributed toward the support of the schools in the past, and assured them of the acceptableness of their future donations. A number of the children had medals and other presents given them in recognition of diligence and success in their studies.

There are at present four of these free schools in charge of the Association; two of which are situated in Avenue C, one in Greenwich-street, and one in Twenty-seventh-street.

Sudden Death at Glen Cove, L. I.

On Saturday morning a very sudden and somewhat singular death occurred at the landing at Glen Cove, Queens County. The wife of JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of that place, had been to the stores to collect her Sunday supplies and make other necessary purchases, and returned home without the least sign of anything being wrong. Shortly after she entered the house, she went to the fireplace, and while in a stooping position, raising some flour, she expired. An inquest was held, and death is supposed to have resulted from heart disease.

Serious Accident in the Bowery.

Yesterday afternoon, about 4:30 o'clock, car No. 106 of the Third-avenue was going down town at a rapid rate, and, when in the Bowery near Houston-street, ran over a boy named HERMAN GURT, of No. 67 First-street, breaking his arm. The boy was carried to Police Headquarters, where his wound was dressed by Dr. ARMSTRONG, and was then taken to Bellevue Hospital in an ambulance, which arrived in charge of Warden BRENNAN within twenty-five minutes from the time the order was sent for it.

Attempted Suicide.

About midnight, Saturday, ELLEN ALLEN, of No. 63 Cherry-street, attempted to commit suicide by taking Paris green. The quantity was not sufficient for her purpose, and the Police being informed of her suffering condition yesterday, she was attended by Dr. ARMSTRONG, and subsequently sent to Bellevue Hospital.
